Abstract

This study presents a re-evaluation of the ceramic material from the sanctuary of the Kabeiroi at Thebes in Boeotia. The lack of relevant literary evidence necessitates a reliance on the archaeology as the primary means of interpretation. In particular the archaeological context and iconography of the ceramics offer an interesting and highly unusual perspective into the secretive and often peculiar nature of the Kabeiric cult.

Previous studies conducted on the ceramic material have only considered it in iconographic terms, yet by reappraising the data using an analytical approach and socio-archaeological theory it is possible to acquire a deeper understanding of the operation of this cult. By examining the form and function of the ceramics we can elicit inferences relating to the role of wine and intoxication within the rituals of the sanctuary. Comparative studies between form and iconography can further develop our interpretations of the scenes as representations of cult practices.

The evidence is further scrutinised for indications as to whether the Theban site is characteristic of the Kabeiric cult as a whole, or if its unique iconography demonstrates its individuality within the ancient world. The data from other Kabeiric and non-Kabeiric sanctuaries clearly indicates that cults within the Greek world were experiencing parallel development in relation to their ceramic usage. Furthermore, the ceramic material from purely Kabeiric sites also shows the same biases in the archaeological record with an emphasis on the preparation and consumption of wine. Extending this research to other archaeological material also implies a common iconographic heritage stretching beyond the boundaries of the Theban site.

By considering the ceramics in a more analytical manner than that of previous research – combining archaeological, anthropological and art historical models – we can move away from the premise that the decorated Greek vase is merely a work of art. Instead it is possible to detail the sanctuary's evolution through the development of the ceramics and to offer insights into the society that produced and utilised them.

Notes

All spellings follow the conventions published in the Oxford Classical Dictionary (1996 Edition). All ancient authors and texts follow the abbreviations published in the OCD where given. The one exception is Kabeiroi, which follows the common transcription given in the published corpus (i.e. Kabeiroi rather than Cabiri).

Place names (i.e. polis, region, etc) follow the conventions published in Hansen and Nielsen (eds.), 2004, An Inventory of Archaic and Classical Poleis: An investigation conducted by the Copenhagen Polis Centre for the Danish National Research Foundation. Certain exceptions are made in the case where alternative spellings are more conventional (i.e. Attica and Caria rather than Attika and Karia).

The vase names in ancient Greek follow those published in Liddell and Scott, 1940, A Greek-English Lexicon.

The chronological periods follow these conventions:

- Archaic 1000-479 BC (Whitley, 2001)
- Classical 479-336 BC (Hornblower, 1991)
- Hellenistic 336-146 BC (Shipley, 2001)
- Roman 146 BC - (Shipley, 2001)

Acknowledgements

I would like to thank the staff and students of the departments of Archaeology and Classics at the University of Glasgow for their support. Foremost among these are my supervisors Prof. Elizabeth Moignard and Dr. Richard Jones for all their support, guidance and encouragement; and Dr Michael Given and Dr Karim Arafat for their advice. Thanks are due to Dr. Allan Hall and Dr. Peter van Dommelen for our bi-annual meetings which helped focus my research, as well as allowing me access to unpublished material. Also Dr. Costas Panayotakis and Prof. Bernard Knapp for their permission to continue my research within both departments. Thanks as well to Dr. Julia Shear for her advice and recommendations. Thanks are also due to Graham Whitaker, Richard Bapty and the librarians at the University of Glasgow library, the British Library and the National Library of Scotland. I also owe many thanks to Penny Wilson, Sandra Pepelasis and Amalia Kakissis at the library at the British School at Athens.

I would also like to thank Dr. Amy Smith and Rhi Smith at the Ure Museum of Classical Art and Archaeology at the University of Reading for their access to the archives and the Boeotian material held by the museum, as well their advice. In addition, I would also like to express my gratitude to Martin Andrews and all the volunteers who made my time at Reading so memorable. Prof. Brian Sparkes and Prof. Jane Gardner also provided inspiration and positive feedback on some early ideas. Prof. Elizabeth Gebhard supplied enthusiasm, recommendations and encouragement. I would also like to thank Prof. David Braund for his long discussions in the British School which helped clarify many of my ideas. I also appreciate the ideas presented by Dr. Hugh Bowden and our subsequent discussions on the Kabeiroi.

Many thanks are due to Dr. Victoria Sabetai for her advice on my PhD topic when I was originally putting my applications together, without Victoria I may have studied a different area of Boeotian pottery. Also Prof. Vasilios Aravantinos for his encouragement and his positive reception when I first discussed my ideas with him. I am also deeply indebted to Dr. Guy Sanders who not only provided his ideas of down-dating with me, but also allowed me access to the unpublished archives of the American School of Classical Studies at Athens Corinthian excavations. I also acknowledge Dr. Kathleen Lynch's advice on some of the more peculiar pieces of pottery. In addition I owe many thanks to the staff at the Archaeological Museum in Myrina, Lemnos for their permission to photograph and record the unpublished pottery from the Kabeirion on the island. I would also like to express my appreciation for the many friends and colleagues I made out in Athens, who offered words of advice and encouragement over the years; notably Claire Pickersgill, Tom Patrick, Heinrich Hall, Marcella Pisani, Kate Collingridge, Prof. John Oakley and the many students and staff of British, American, Irish, Canadian and other international archaeological schools out in Athens.

I would also like to express my gratitude to my friends and fellow postgraduates at the University of Glasgow, especially Jackie Dennett, Sandra Rosendahl, Erin McGuire, Marie Martin, Vasiliki Ivrou and Sarah Thomas for providing support, information and encouragement.

I would also like to thank my colleagues at STAGE (St Andrews, Glasgow and Edinburgh Classics Postgraduate Association) for their support. Recognition must also be given to the feedback, questions and discussions (especially Prof. Martin Jones and Prof. Alex Garvie) resulting from various conferences which helped shape the thesis; AMPAH (Cambridge, 2008), Food and Drink in Archaeology (Nottingham, 2007), Works in Progress (ICS, London, 2006) and STAGE (Edinburgh, 2006).

I would also like to thank the following for their assistance in my research: the Royal Historical Society, and the Faculty of Arts Postgraduate Studentship, the Faculty of Arts Research Support, the Dept of Archaeology Research Support and the Whistler Travelling Scholarship, Dept of Art History (all University of Glasgow).

I would also like to thank John Malcolm, who has made the last couple of years so much more enjoyable and has also had to cope with my ups and downs during the whole process.

I owe so many thanks to my family, for their support and encouragement throughout my postgraduate study. Especially my mum, Judith Bedigan, who has uncomplaining been dragged through sites and museums, read proofs and listened as I tried to formulate my ideas – thank you.

I would also like to recognise that many of the people who should be thanked are no longer here today, but who gave me support, encouragement and the confidence to do this.

Chapter One

Introduction

But though the Kabeiroi play an important part in the history of Greek religion, their place in art is not important.

Collignon, 1890: 161

The sanctuary of the Kabeiroi at Thebes is an unusual site. Although very little written evidence relating to the complex itself exists, the votives do provide a range of information that requires further consideration. The pottery, and in particular the type known as 'Kabeiric Ware', is unique amongst the world of Greek ceramics, and its elements of caricature and grotesque are said to represent the ritual life of the sanctuary. Previous studies have attempted to identify the meanings behind the scenes, though with a limited degree of success. As others have indicated, understanding pottery when textual evidence is limited is extremely difficult.¹ Whilst this thesis will consider the iconographic evidence provided by the Kabeiric Ware ceramics, it will also attempt to place the rituals and activities depicted on the vases into a wider context. By drawing upon material from across the Greek world we can elaborate on the motivation and reasoning behind the choice of imagery.

The importance of the Kabeiric cult has yet to be explored to its full extent. Although Hemberg's Die Kabiren (1950) presented the most complete catalogue of Kabeiric and related material at the time, the last 60 years of archaeological and historical investigations has provided more evidence that requires consideration. Clarifying the identity of the Kabeiroi is complicated by the confusion over which group of gods is which, not only in a modern context but also in antiquity. As this cult left little trace of itself in literature, it is the archaeology to which we must turn in order to explain the Kabeiroi.

1.1 Research Questions and Aims

As the archaeology represents the best opportunity for understanding the Kabeiric cult and this sanctuary in particular, we need to approach it in a logical manner. Understandably, there is too much archaeological material to be considered by this thesis alone. Whilst reference will be made to other artefacts known from the site, the emphasis here will be placed firmly upon the ceramic evidence. The frequent presence of certain pottery forms combined with the distinctive iconography used during the Archaic-Early Hellenistic period would indicate the importance of the ceramics. However, why these were significant needs to be explained. Do they have a clear function or role at the site, especially in regard to the rituals practised? The degree of specialisation would certainly support this hypothesis. In order to test these theories we need to consider not only the ceramics but also their relationship with the sanctuary and other votives. Are there logical connections between them or are the links anomalous? More importantly, Thebes is only a single site and Kabeiric Ware does appear to be an incongruity in the Greek ceramic record. If it is so peculiar, how does the material at Thebes relate to that at other cult centres? Does the Kabeiric cult have similarities or distinctive characteristics with regard to its use of the pottery?

1.2 Organisation

Owing to the lack of literary evidence we must rely on other sources to fill in many of the missing details (1.3). The material relating to other mystery cults in Greece provides a wealth of information, and it would appear that there are rituals characteristic of mystery cults generally. Further discussion considers the Kabeiroi in terms of identity and function (1.3.1). This complexity also extends to the sanctuary itself, both in the history of its excavation and the chronological development of the cult centre (1.4).

In Chapter 2, the research framework is explained and the key issues surrounding the theoretical approaches to Classical archaeology are explored. There does seem to be a lack of interest in developing theories on ancient Greek ceramics, which appears to be rooted in the concept that painted vases are not archaeology; indeed they are viewed as art historical objects because of their iconography. By taking this further and by considering both the iconography and the archaeology of the vases together, it is possible to provide a more in-depth insight into their value within the sanctuary.

To further our consideration of the vases as archaeological objects, Chapter 3 presents the typology for the known ceramics from the site. Emphasis is placed firmly on the concept of function as the source of the information, and the iconography is then used to explore this idea further. If the ceramics from the Kabeirion truly are representations of cult activity, then the scenes can also tell us how the vases were used during specific events. Chapters 4, 5 and 7 consider the vases chronologically. Using the phasing presented in 1.4 the development of the sanctuary is discussed; this includes the changes to the architectural layout of the site and also the historical events occurring during the period. It is apparent that these events often had an impact on sanctuaries in Greece, and this can be traced in the archaeological record. Data for each period are organised in two different ways. Firstly, the find contexts for the datable vases are presented, and the relationship between structure and ceramic explored. Secondly, the totals for the different vase shapes are shown and discussed. By displaying the data in this way, trends and anomalies can be clearly distinguished. Chapter 6 investigates the phenomenon of Kabeiric Ware through its iconographic evidence. By examining the interpretations normally offered for this decorative type it is possible to develop our understanding of the sanctuary. Furthermore, by expanding our discussion to include case studies of the more interesting elements we can test and revise our initial interpretations of the Kabeiric Ware iconographic corpus.

However, these observations relating to vase form and iconography are only based on one sanctuary. If the Kabeiric cult was widespread in the eastern Mediterranean we need to place this information within the wider context. In Chapter 8, ceramics from other sanctuaries are considered. It is by comparing the material from a range of sites that we can identify whether there are overall trends characterising the cult as a whole.

1.3 Mystery Cults in Ancient Greece

The information available on ancient mystery cults varies depending on the sanctuary involved. For some, like the Eleusinian mysteries, we have a surprising amount of literature providing insights into the cult; for those like the Kabeiroi we have very little. A mystery cult is generally identified as having two components; firstly a rite of passage, and secondly what can essentially be described as a vow of secrecy. Therefore speaking or performing ritual activities outside the sanctuary would have met with disaster and criticism, although the full extent of this is difficult to determine.² If we consider the profanation of the mysteries at Athens and the outcry associated with it,³ this emphasis on silence explains much when considering the lack of evidence. It has also been suggested that the concept of silence was not to encourage those who sought initiation, but rather to emphasise the dread nature of the deities involved.⁴

Mystery religions appear to be generally widespread throughout the ancient world with the deities originating from a variety of cultures. Burkert has identified some of the main groups in the introduction to his work, Ancient Mystery Cults, namely the mysteries of Eleusis, Dionysos (also known as the Bacchic mysteries), Meter, Isis and Mithras.⁵ The Kabeiroi are not included in this list, although Burkert does acknowledge that their sanctuaries at Thebes and Samothrace are important.⁶

⁶ Ibid, 135 n.16.

What is perhaps unusual about mystery cults is that they were not obligatory; joining one was a matter of personal choice.⁷ Furthermore, the cults appeared to be relatively open in who was allowed to join, with membership not being limited by gender or origin.⁸ All of these cults offered something in return for initiation, whether it was for benefits in the present life or salvation in the next.⁹ The purported aim for many of the mysteries was to dispel the fear of death (though neither Samothrace nor Thebes appeared to offer this).¹⁰ The very idea of salvation was sufficient for many scholars to propose that the mystery religions were offering the first step towards Christianity.¹¹ Yet mystery religions are by their very nature quite distinct from the Christian theologies, and scholarly attempts to prove this connection have distorted the picture to one that would support their Christianised arguments.¹²

1.3.1 The Kabeiroi

One of the major difficulties when dealing with the Kabeiroi is the identification of who exactly they were and why they were worshipped. There are long-standing debates over which sanctuaries belonged to or worshipped Kabeiric divinities. The presence of similar groups of deities in the eastern Mediterranean only complicates matters further. Both ancient and modern authors have had difficulty in separating the gods into their respective groups.¹³ Although separate origins can sometimes be acknowledged, this can only be done to a certain extent. The major groups often identified with the Kabeiroi are the Megaloi Theoi and the Great Gods of Samothrace (Samothracian Theoi), though the latter is somewhat debatable.

¹⁰ Idem, 2001: 277; Lehmann, K., 1998: 38.

¹² Burkert, 1987: 3; Bruit Zaidman and Schmitt Pantel, 1992: 78.

Hemberg suggested that the titles Kabeiroi, Megaloi Theoi and Samothracian Theoi were synonyms for one another; this argument is based on etymological analysis.¹⁴ When this argument was proposed, the Kabeiroi were believed to be of Semitic origin, the term K[a]bir translating as 'mighty one'.¹⁵ More recently Beekes has suggested that the Kabeiroi belong to a group known as the Megaloi Theoi, or the Great Gods, rather than it being a direct pseudonym.¹⁶ Beekes' reconsideration of the origin of the name Kabeiroi as Anatolian appears convincing, especially in view of the linguistic evidence presented.¹⁷ If multiple deities, all with some similarity of function used the same honorific title it would explain how authors, both ancient and modern, identified them as a single entity or group. A list of deities and groups associated with the title is provided by Hemberg,¹⁸ and ranges from Cyclopes and Harpies to nymphs and the Dioscouroi; this would support the idea of Megaloi Theoi being a general description rather than a specific name. If it is simply an honorific title, then its usage at the sanctuaries is problematic. Many of the sites are known as sanctuaries of the Megaloi Theoi, and imply that at some point this title evolved from a term of respect into a group of divinities in its own right. This may explain much of the confusion regarding the relationship of the title with the Kabeiroi. If groups of deities were given the title Great Gods as an honorific, then it would not be unexpected for the Megaloi Theoi to be equated with those divinities that had previously enjoyed the title.

The relationship between Kabeiroi and Samothracian Theoi is particularly difficult to explain. Burkert asserts that the two cults are very different, but acknowledges that many later sources believed otherwise.¹⁹ Mnaseas gives the names of the Samothracian Theoi as Axieros, Axiocersos and Axiocersa.²⁰ Elsewhere, to confuse matters further these names, along with Cadmilos, are given as the deities of the site at Thebes.²¹ It would seem likely that this is a misattribution, as these names are only used in connection with Samothrace. There is certainly some relationship between the two cults,²² which cannot be explained by dismissing them as misinterpretations of the historical and archaeological record. More recent publications also tend to point to a single cult rather than the Samothracian Theoi being worshipped as completely separate entities.²³ At the same time there is the possibility that some of the votives at Ilion would imply some union of the two cults,²⁴ and there are also the Kabeirion and Samothrakeion which share a site on Delos.²⁵ On the basis that the ancient authors confused the deities, it would seem illogical to dismiss out of hand the sites belonging to the Samothracian Theoi. Therefore, both theories lend themselves to speculation that the cults are/are not connected and have evidence that would prove/disprove the hypothesis. However this thesis is not based upon the accurate attribution of sanctuaries to specific gods or groups of divinities. Should future studies prove that there are differences between the cults, the benefit of retaining the data from Samothrace would facilitate investigation into the possibility of similar practices in other mystery cults in the eastern Mediterranean.

If we accept the Kabeiroi as a distinct group and disregard the specifics sometimes ascribed to the Megaloi Theoi and Samothracian Theoi, it is apparent that even when restricting research to these deities the situation is still perhaps unnecessarily complicated. The variability in the nature of the Kabeiroi is impressive. There are differences in what they represent, their genealogical connections, the reason for their worship and their actual numbers (Table 1.1, p.41). The available evidence indicates that the Kabeiroi could be represented as a group of masculine deities whose function and background differed according to the needs of the community in which the cult was situated. This variation may also account for the difficulties in attribution; different gods with the same function have often been assimilated in

On the basis of the available evidence there are three distinct categories for the Kabeiroi. As we are considering three sanctuaries termed Kabeiric for the purposes of this study, it would be prudent to define the form of the deities present at each cult centre. These three cults each represent the Kabeiroi in a different light and it is interesting to note that the sanctuaries and other sites identified in Appendix A adhere to one or more of the following three models.

1. Theban Type: Kabeiroi consist of a father-son duo, complying with the Boeotian preference for male pairs.²⁶ Names can vary.²⁷ Focus of the cult is Dionysiac in nature, both in terms of iconography and activity.²⁸ Votives would suggest strong links to fertility (animal, human and agricultural) and viticulture.
2. Lemnian Type: Kabeiroi consist of three brothers, nominally the sons of Hephaestos and the nymph Kabeiro.²⁹ No given names, although the title karkinoi or crabs can apply.³⁰ Focus of the cult is closely related to Hephaestos, so is an emphasis on metal working.³¹ Archaeological remains and fragments from Aeschylus' play Kabeiroi would also imply a connection with viticulture.³²
3. Samothracian Type: Kabeiroi are unspecified, but possibly number from two to four. If there are four deities, the names are given as Axieros, Axiocersos, Axiocersa and Cadmilos.³³ The Greek equivalents are Demeter, Hades, Persephone and Hermes.³⁴ Most of the votives and inscriptions intimate that the cult was popular with seafarers, as the majority offer thanks for protection and rescue at sea.³⁵

The cult centres across the eastern Mediterranean appear to have adopted one or more of these models which suggests that, although there may have been a common origin, there was also a degree of individual development. The founding dates indicated for the three centres would certainly support the theory that these particular sanctuaries evolved first, and that the others included in Appendix A were based upon these original sites. Of the three contenders either Lemnos or Samothrace could claim to be the first, though most publications suggest that Lemnos is the earlier sanctuary, c. seventh century BC.³⁶ However, others propose that the sanctuary on Samothrace was established prior to the colonisation of the island by Greek settlers in c.700 BC,³⁷ which would make it the first of the cult centres. The origins of the Theban cult are more difficult to place, as the dates are dependent on the votives present. For the earliest period we must rely on the bronze and lead figurines whose dating has been called into question.³⁸ They can actually be traced to the tenth century BC, which would therefore place Thebes considerably before Lemnos or Samothrace. Unfortunately very little discussion has ever been conducted regarding this point. As all appear to agree that the North Aegean sites are the earliest, how then do we explain this material at Thebes?

1.3.2 Understanding the Rituals

Regardless of the deities being honoured, the actual rituals performed at a mystery sanctuary appear to follow similar paths and are central to our understanding of a cult centre. In a sense the ceremonies offer a rite of passage through the movement of an individual from one socially approved role into another. All rituals have been identified as such and represent an exception to ordinary social practice.³⁹ In the case of initiation, the rites of passage have three distinct phases. In stage one, the liminal phase, the initiate is removed from normal circumstances and purified in preparation for the rituals that are to follow.⁴⁰ Stage two usually comprises the actual initiation ceremony, and is known as the separation phase.⁴¹ Finally in the third stage the initiate re-enters society as a member of the cult endowed with the good fortune that has been bestowed upon them as initiates, and is referred to as the aggregation phase.⁴²

It is by evaluating the known information from Samothrace, dedicated to the Great Gods (or the Kabeiroi, depending on some sources) and from Eleusis, dedicated to Demeter, that numerous similarities become apparent. It can therefore be inferred that the Theban cult operated in a comparable manner.

Both sanctuaries appear to have a two-level initiation process, each affording participants different levels of access at the cult. At Eleusis the first stage, or 'Little Mysteries', involved the sacrifice of a piglet and a purification ceremony, perhaps with some form of ritual consumption.⁴³ The full initiation, 'Great Mysteries', took place at a fixed point in the calendar during the month of Boedromion. This involved a grand procession from Athens, purification in the sea (spread over several days), and finally the revelation of the sacred things to an audience of mystai (first-time attenders) and epoptai (those who had attended previously).⁴⁴ The Samothracian cult operated in a similar manner, with one subtle difference, in that initiation at both levels (mystai and epoptai) could take place one after the other, unlike Eleusis which required preliminary initiation and then attendance at the festival during Boedromion.⁴⁵ It has been suggested that in the Samothracian case, initiation into the higher level of mysteries was not obligatory, unlike Eleusis. Documentary evidence also suggests that admission to the level of epoptai was relatively rare, indicating that there may have been certain compulsory conditions.⁴⁶

1.4.1 Chronology of the Sanctuary

Considering the rather complex investigations involving the sanctuary (Figure 1.1, p.47), it is apparent that interpreting the data could be equally difficult. There are various chronologies identifying the major periods in the site's development but these can differ quite considerably. The phases presented in this thesis are based on the original suggestions made by Heyder and Mallwitz (1978), and Schachter (1986) as well as the history of the sanctuary's pottery, and Table 1.2 details the various chronologies given for the site. Overall, there is little difference between those previously published and the revised sequence used for this thesis. It must be recognised, however, that the complex cannot be divided into overly rigid phases;⁴⁷ and those listed are approximations only as a way of presenting the ceramic material clearly for the purposes of this study. These revised periods were based upon the data from the archaeological remains (structures and artefacts) and the historical events.

⁴⁷ Further consideration of the sanctuary's chronology is available in Schachter, 2003: 136-138.

Using this chronology (Table 1.2, revised) the chapters present not only the ceramics but also a general overview of the sanctuary in terms of its architectural development. In addition to this, the sanctuary is viewed from a wider perspective. By examining the political and cultural events of the periods we can understand to what extent the circumstances, at a local, regional and national level, affected the sanctuary and its activities.

1.4.2 The Excavations

The history of the excavations is nearly as complex as the history of the sanctuary itself (Figure 1.2, p.50). Whilst the published excavation reports attempt to clarify the situation, there are difficulties that cannot be easily (if at all) overcome. Part of these complications originate from the fact that the lead archaeologist for both periods of excavation died before the publication of their results, leaving others to deal with the material that they had organised.⁴⁸ As Coulton so aptly writes: ‘To publish a dead scholar’s excavation is always a frustrating task; it must be doubly so when, as in this case, there are two quite separate series of excavations to be dealt with’.⁴⁹

The original excavations were led by Wolters and Dörpfeld from 1887-1890 and were designed as a rescue dig to forestall looting by the local community.⁵⁰ The excavation report was published in 1940, after both of these archaeologists were dead. It was recognised at this point that there was still much to be clarified, and that further research was needed. Bruns, the editor of the information from the first excavation, revisited the site for seven seasons from 1956 onwards,⁵¹ and died four years after the completion of the final campaign.⁵²

Although a reasonably complete series of excavation reports has been published, omissions and problems have been highlighted. Most notable is the projected seventh volume dealing with the non-human terracotta figurines and coins from the sanctuary which has never been finalised.⁵³ Further concerns arise in relation to the fact that walls and pottery disappeared without record after the original excavation.⁵⁴ The issue regarding the archaeological information also persists in connection with the lack of specific find contexts for many of the ceramics. Less than 300 vases have definite contexts belonging to the sanctuary, and there are some that have provenances pertaining to the Theban tombs at Thespias and Chaeronea.⁵⁵ For the purposes of this study, we can only presume that the vases published in Das Kabirenheiligtum bei Theben, unless otherwise stated, are from the Kabeirion or at least the near vicinity. Find contexts are only rarely supplied. Out of approximately 2,200 catalogue entries for ceramic objects, there are less than 400 find contexts extant, and many of these are for individual fragments from a single vase.⁵⁶ In addition to this, the find contexts are listed inconsistently, with some fragments being provided with trenches or features that were nearby, or a context; grid references are rarely supplied. Even more entries for fragments list vague and potentially misleading provenances – such as ‘Dig A by wall M28’, ‘Dig B’, ‘from north canal’ and so on. This situation could be clarified by consulting the original excavation notebooks, but the difficulties associated with the publication of the site reports would surely be replicated with the ceramics and their find contexts. As a result of this difficulty, the discussion of find contexts in chapters 4, 5 and 7 is limited. The fragments were assigned grid references based on the information provided in KH4 and this was used to plot distribution horizontally at the site. The levels provided had to be ignored due to the inability to identify where that level should be at the site. It is recognised that some vases, including those by the Painter of the Great Athenian Kantharos, have been incorporated purely because of their subject matter. Few vases with depictions of the Kabeiric deities, in whatever guise, have been found outside the site, and we must presume that there is a connection, however tentative that link may be.

Chapter Two

Theory and Methodology

2.1 Introduction

The unusual position that Classical archaeology occupies within the different disciplines: classics, archaeology, art history and anthropology cannot be denied. It does not necessarily conform with any one of them; Snodgrass describes Classical archaeology as ‘an independent subject’.¹ Others state that Classical archaeology has a ‘markedly traditional orientation in both Britain and the United States’.² Yet the subject offers the opportunity to combine multi-disciplinary approaches in a manner impossible in other areas.³

Certain subject areas in archaeology appear to avoid (or perhaps cut off) the development of theory within anthropological archaeology.⁴ Interestingly, Gosden attributes this absence of Classical archaeology to the specific problem of scepticism regarding the ‘jargon and abstractedness of those who espoused a generalising, anthropological approach’.⁵ At the same time ancient pottery, and particularly the fine ware of ancient Greece, is often viewed as non-archaeological because so much of the research carried out in regard to it has a strictly empirical nature.⁶ Only a few have tried to evaluate Greek ceramics with the express purpose of discussing its function or why it was decorated/manufactured in a particular manner.⁷ Two notable examples are Shanks’ volumes, Classical Archaeology of

Greece: Experiences of the Discipline (1996) and Art and the Greek City State: An Interpretive Archaeology (1999). These may have developed from Shanks' observation that 'large sections of archaeology remain untouched by the developments in archaeological thinking of the last three decades. This is particularly the case...in Classical and Near Eastern archaeology'.⁸

This thesis aims to combine an archaeological approach with iconographical and iconological perspectives as the basis for studying the decorated and plain ceramic material from the sanctuary of the Kabeiroi at Thebes. This system will consider the pottery not only for its iconographic evidence, but also for its function within the site. The archaeological contexts of the ceramics will be utilised to explore possible interpretations for building use. The iconography will also be applied in this context as specific scenes can often shed light on both the activities and their associated structures within the cult. By combining these two approaches, chronological perspectives on trends and anomalies can be recognised and discussed.

2.2 Approaches to Ancient Greek Vases

The approach to the study of Greek vases can be summarised into three distinct categories: connoisseur, iconographer and iconologist.⁹ It can be argued that the methodological procedures used by these classifications fail to recognise the full value of painted Greek vases as a valid piece of archaeological evidence; instead they are considered as art. Vases are frequently missing provenances, or given basic labels identifying a region or town without any further specifics. The categorisation of painted Greek pottery has often relegated it, as a subject, to the sphere of art history. The resulting effect of this classification has led to the dismissal of painted Greek pottery as 'art' objects, whereas their coarse ware counterparts are viewed as archaeological.

⁸ Shanks, 1992: 20. Snodgrass (2006: 67) offers a similar opinion, 'the pioneers of New Archaeology have in the main ignored Classical Archaeology, whether for praise or for blame, almost as if it did not exist'.

⁹ Shanks, 1996: 30-43.

In contrast, Whitley (1997) argues that Beazley, although only creating 'lists' in a sense, was indeed making a valuable contribution to vase scholarship and that this methodology of classification was based on previous theoretical models.¹⁰ However, the fact that Beazley never referred to these prior examples of approach is of no consequence for Whitley because 'one does not have to be an advocate of a particular theory in order to propagate it'.¹¹ The fact that Beazley had a clear theoretical bent to his work is apparent.¹² At the same time, Whitley criticises the school of thought that has arisen from Beazley's legacy, suggesting that research into single vase painters or groups is somehow less intellectually based.¹³ In response to these opinions, Oakley proposed the idea that studying one vase painter is no different to studying a single type of artefact, and that by approaching a painter from a wide variety of aspects present in the ancient world we could actually gain something.¹⁴ The intolerance that Oakley suggests is present in Whitley's paper echoes a comment made by Whitley, who stated that the vase scholarship of Beazley has been overlooked and forgotten by other areas of archaeological research.¹⁵

2.2.1 Connoisseur, Iconographer, Iconologist

The three standard methods (Figure 2.1, p.55) place a heavy emphasis on the study of these objects from a more artistic, rather than an anthropological or archaeological, level. Any publications regarding the history of the study of Greek painted pottery rely heavily on the art historical approach: catalogue, classify and identify. From the diagram (Figure 2.1, p.55) it is immediately clear that all three of the standard processes depend on these principles: connoisseurship, often described as 'the heritage of Beazley',¹⁶ as the recording and identification of artists, groups and styles; iconography as the cataloguing and recognition of scene types; and iconology as the identification of the specifics of subject matter. None of these methods attempts to place Greek vases within, or relating to, a sociological framework. The vase is segregated from the society that created it and is simply viewed as an object without context (except in relation to other vases by the same artist or displaying similar iconography). When studying the peculiar nature of Kabeiric iconography there is little hope of understanding the motives behind the scenes if the relationship between the vase and the cult is ignored.

2.2.2 Theoretical Approaches

Attempting to place Greek vase images within a wider sociological framework requires a shift from the simple catalogue-classify-identify system. Yet despite the potential problems with modes of study like connoisseur, iconographer and iconologist, these do form the basis of later analytical approaches. In the introduction to Carpenter's volume on the representations of Dionysos in fifth century Athenian pottery, there are a series of research questions.¹⁷ These questions provide several different avenues to pursue when considering the iconographic and archaeological value of a Greek vase. As an aid to studying and interpreting Boeotian Kabeiric Ware, some are exceedingly useful.

1. How does the image relate to other types of contemporary images?

The concept of repetition probably evolved from anthropology, a development of the iconological approach that tries to place these scenes within the historical and social context.¹⁹ Hoffmann noted in his study of Athenian askoi that repeated images were essential to the understanding of the vases as a group.²⁰ His selection of askoi as the basis for demonstrating a structuralist analysis to ceramics clearly recognised that these depended on a scene of opposites. In his group, all of the askoi (except one) had what he described as an opposition pair – pursuer/pursued, male/female – and that these were always depicted within five specific layouts.²¹ The recognition that there were only a selected number of accepted scene topics and layouts indicates that there was a specific message being portrayed on the vases. Hoffman, when combining the iconographic evidence with other factors (including typical find locations), reached the conclusion that the askoi were representative of sacrifice, a simple analogy of life and death.²² His ideas are continued in later works which further developed the concept of repetition.²³

Steiner uses the argument of repetition to continue the belief that vases have a particular message in their depictions, and extends this to include not only the iconographical subject but also the vase shape itself.²⁴ It is by repeating scene types and over-exaggerating the topic that the message is emphasised and made clearer to the viewer.²⁵ Steiner uses the analogy that a message passed many times between two people who are almost out of earshot of one another will be interpreted as slightly different each time it is shouted. By combining all the statements made, even if they are somewhat different, the original message and intent can be discerned by amalgamating all the available data.²⁶ Vase scenes are subject to slight variations in the manner of their portrayal, but still retain the ability to ensure that the image is recognisable as a specific topic.

Carpenter's first question can be broadened to investigate whether the vase scenes are repeated not only in contemporary art but also within the ceramic corpus of the Kabeirion. On the basis of Hoffmann and Steiner's arguments, the level of repetition in both the decoration and shape of Kabeiric Ware vases should emphasise whether the scenes/shapes are important to our understanding of the sanctuary. As the iconography of Kabeiric vases are primarily scenes of parody,²⁷ there are certain aspects that we must attribute to the audience. To understand the concept of parody, the audience needs to have some prior knowledge of what is being viewed.²⁸ An extract from a private letter written by Goethe summarises this concept:

The ancients saw a picture as an enclosed and separate whole; they wanted to show everything within the given space; one was not to think something about the picture, one was to think the picture and see everything in it. By putting together the various stages of the poem and of the tradition, they set the sequence before our eyes; for our bodily eyes are to see the picture and enjoy it.²⁹

The issues that arise from a lack of understanding can be eloquently illustrated in a story from Aelian regarding a performance of Aristophanes' Clouds. Aelian tells us that a group of foreigners questioned who exactly Socrates was, at which point Socrates himself, who was sitting in the audience, stood up.³⁰ This story, regardless of its accuracy, demonstrates that unless the viewer knows what is going on, the joke is lost. Therefore, the Kabeiric vases must show depictions that are familiar to the audience; this means that both the iconography and the vase shapes being used are directly relevant to our understanding of the cult.

Within Chapter 6 there are two distinct approaches to the material. The first is a detailed catalogue of the scenes found upon Kabeiric vases which are subdivided into the three stages of initiation and ritual. This section is summarised by detailing what aspects of life at the mystery cult can be observed. Whilst this admittedly can be described as a case of catalogue-classify-identify, the observations and information that the scenes provide can be interpreted following the theoretical model suggested by Carpenter's first question. Therefore, the second section of Chapter 6 focuses more on the anthropological and social aspects indicated by these depictions. The subjects chosen for consideration are based upon the issues of representation, acceptance, inequality, gender, outside influences and the amalgamation of ideas. By discussing these in more detail using artistic, archaeological and literary sources, pictures can be built up to illustrate society.

2. What is the historical context?

Identification of the historical context of iconography aids the construction of a chronological framework into which ceramic evidence can be inserted. By allowing for correspondence between the ceramic chronology and the known historical calendar we can identify the events in Theban history that affected aspects of ritual activity. Changes in the social or political circumstances of Thebes can be witnessed in the ceramic material from the Kabeirion. This relationship of history and pottery is explored in Chapters 4, 5 and 7, and takes into account not only the history of the period, but also the developments within the sanctuary itself.

3. What evidence is there for a social context?

In relation to the historical context of Kabeiric ceramics, an understanding of the social framework would also be beneficial. The artefacts need to be interpreted as archaeological objects which should in turn clarify their social and cultural function.³¹ In his study of Corinthian aryballoi, Shanks noted that there were various aspects that could be extracted from a single vase (Figure 2.2, p.58).³² By combining these approaches it is clear that they fit quite closely with his criteria for a social archaeology.³³

These ideas for a social archaeology can also be tied in with Carpenter's first question and the concept of repetition. As repeated scenes provide information relating to the sanctuary, this should allow for observations to be made regarding the participants at the cult centre, as aspects such as age, gender and social class are all visible.

³² Ibid, 13-14.

4. Are anthropological models useful?

The application of anthropological models to the evidence available from the ceramics of the Kabeirion can prove useful. Hoffmann and Steiner's models are both based originally on social anthropology and linguistics.³⁵ By using anthropological theory in order to facilitate our interpretation of the iconography, we can incorporate the visual evidence with those of consumption, gender and rites of passage. If these are applied to other elements of the sanctuary, namely its rituals and material evidence, further discussion can be based upon the concepts of boundaries and the interaction and movement of participants through the landscape.

The above questions provide the framework of the theoretical approach used within this thesis (Figure 2.3, p.62) and relate extremely well to Shanks' description of a social archaeology.³⁶ However, a conscious decision was made not to reject outright the previous models of ceramic research. Whilst techniques such as connoisseurship or iconography are flawed, they still provide some valuable information. By joining these heavily art historical methods with the more anthropologically-based socio-archaeology it should be possible to place not only the ceramics within the social structure, but also explain the iconography.³⁷

This means that our approach to the ceramics at the site will have two key areas of discussion; (1) what do the types and function of the pottery tell us, and (2) what information does the iconography provide? If we consider (1), the function of the ceramics is dictated by its form and our knowledge of these vessels in other contexts. Initial observations indicate that alcohol, specifically wine, was central to the cult as the archaeology indicates both preparation and consumption. In addition to the drinking paraphernalia, the remaining ceramics are strongly orientated towards food, both cooking and dining. By considering the ceramics in terms of their location within the sanctuary, we can determine the relationship between the structures and the pottery as a means of interpreting how they were used.

When considered in conjunction with the functional typology, the iconography can cast further light on the rituals at the site. Individual types of ceramics tend to be found largely in the environs of particular structures. The iconography of these particular ceramics demonstrates trends in the choice of scenes. The Dionysian theme of many of the vases connects with the use of wine at the site, and the connection between the sanctuary and agriculture or viticulture is clear. Many of these scenes, whilst seemingly unrelated to the actual initiation, appear to depict activities carried out at the sanctuary, casting light on a secretive cult. That many of these scenes have images of alcohol consumption, both pre- and post- initiation, makes it apparent that wine plays a role in ritual activity at the site. The numbers of vases with images comparable to those depicting the stage, with figures wearing what appear to be masks, hints at the concept of transformation. This idea would link with the anthropological models concerning initiation and other rites of passage. The iconography, especially those which relate to stories from the Odyssey, also supports this theory.

The material evidence from Thebes can contribute greatly to our understanding of the ceramics as well as other activities at the sanctuary. Nevertheless, to assume that the Theban material will represent an accurate picture of ceramics at all Kabeiric sites is presumptuous. As Thebes is unique in its characteristic Kabeiric Ware, it is highly unlikely that any of the other Kabeiric sites would have ceramics with comparable iconographic material. Comparisons need to be made by using the ceramic catalogues from a number of Kabeiric sites within the Mediterranean. Since the concept of repetition can be applied to vase shape as well as iconography, observations and conclusions can still be drawn. By using the same methodological approach as that used on the Theban material it should be possible to confirm whether the picture seen at Thebes is indeed accurate for all sanctuaries.

2.3 The Methodological Approach to the Kabeirion Material

2.3.1 Quantitative and Qualitative Analysis

The definitions of these analytical methods are fairly straightforward. Quantitative analysis clarifies the number of ceramics involved by detailing exactly how many of each type have been identified.³⁹ Obviously this method is totally reliant on the accurate cataloguing and publication of the material. Selective or badly published data results in a distorted picture being presented.⁴⁰ Quantitative investigation on its own is simply a statistical exercise; on the other hand, when put together with qualitative analysis it can provide much more information. Qualitative study deals with the ceramics in terms of their decoration, function, find context and point of manufacture.⁴¹ This information can then be used to develop a social picture of the pottery by considering aspects beyond basic numerical totals. By combining all these critical methods, it should present a complete picture of the ceramics at the Kabeiric sanctuaries.

2.3.2 Case Studies: Methodological Approaches to Greek Ceramics

There have been a number of publications using various types of analysis methodologies. Although the majority of these are focused on Corinth or Corinthian material, there are other studies considering the ceramics from elsewhere, a selection of which is discussed below. These case studies were chosen because of their methodological and theoretical approaches, and how they relate to the study of the ceramics from the Kabeirion. It is necessary to explain the techniques used by these works in order to justify the reasoning behind, and the potential problems of, the methodologies used within this thesis.

Shanks, 1996: Classical Archaeology of Greece: Experiences of the Discipline and 1999: Art and the Greek City State: An Interpretive Archaeology

In the preface of Classical Archaeology it is stated that the volume is an accompaniment to Art and the Greek City State, and it therefore seems logical to consider these works as a pair.⁴² Whilst the former considers the history of Greek ceramics from the methods in which the subject is studied to the mentalities behind its collection, the latter relates to its practical application. Perhaps the most interesting of the chapters specifically relevant to this study deal with social archaeology. In them Shanks recognises that there is much criticism of Classical archaeology as a subject and argues for a revision of many of its methods.⁴³ The approaches to the Corinthian material in Art and the Greek City State show the progress that he advocated in the earlier volume. However, both volumes do fall prey to over-complexity, a common complaint when considering archaeological theory.⁴⁴ Interestingly, despite his criticisms of the standardised procedures to Greek vase studies, iconography is still incorporated into the interpretation of the Corinthian evidence. Although Shanks advocates further development in the study of Greek painted vases, there is the (possibly subconscious) recognition that iconography is still needed. Ignoring decoration completely is not the answer; the scenes selected are chosen for a purpose, a reflection perhaps of society's wants and needs. Continuing Shanks' idea of change – that vase and decoration need to be studied together – it is important to consider decorated ceramics in those works which investigate both aspects.

Kristensen, 2001: Protocorinthian Pottery in Greek Sanctuaries

This study aimed to discuss the 'distribution, character and use of Protocorinthian pottery in Greek sanctuaries'.⁴⁵ It is achieved by amalgamating quantitative and qualitative analysis in the form of a series of questions which are then applied to each of the sanctuaries within the study (Figure 2.4).

- (A) What is the nature of the quantitative distribution of the Protocorinthian vase-types in the individual sanctuaries?
- (i) Which vase-types are represented in the individual sanctuaries?
 - (ii) Which vase-types are favoured and which do not achieve any widespread distribution?
 - (iii) Does any pattern emerge in the incidence of vase-types of sanctuaries which would indicate that some sanctuaries exhibited a preference for certain vase-types and, if so, was there any reason for this?
 - (iv) Was the choice of certain vase-types dictated by which particular god was worshipped in the sanctuary or by certain geographical factors?
- (B) How can a standard be established for judging the quality of the vases?
- (i) How are the vases decorated?
 - (ii) Have some sanctuaries acquired Protocorinthian pottery of a quality superior to or a decorative merit greater than others?
- (C) In what ceramic context does the Protocorinthian pottery feature in the sanctuaries?
- (i) What other imported and locally-produced pottery appears in the sanctuaries, together with the Protocorinthian?
 - (ii) Is there anything to suggest that the Protocorinthian pottery was used to meet a need for certain types of vessels not produced locally or are the vase-types among the imported Protocorinthian ware the same as those favoured by local production?
- (D) What function had the Protocorinthian pottery in the cult practice?

Kristensen acknowledged that there were problems with this approach, mainly in the initial selection of sanctuaries which had suitable Protocorinthian material published.⁴⁷ Yet despite the careful choice of sites dedicated to a variety of male and female deities, there are still further complications which have to be addressed. For example, the publication of the Argive Heraion predated the majority of the developments in the study of Protocorinthian ceramics. This necessitated the complete reorganisation of the chronology of the ceramics from the site, and the separation of later Corinthian and Argive pottery from the Protocorinthian material.⁴⁸ The concluding observations from this research recognised that there were important variations in the types of ceramics found at the different cult centres. These incorporated fluctuations in the number of vessels with symposiastic functions between sanctuaries. An example given in the study notes stated that these appeared frequently at Perachora and the Argive Heraion, but only in smaller quantities in others.⁴⁹

Sørensen, 2001: Archaic Greek Painted Pottery from Cyprus, Naukratis and Tell Defenneh

Rather than focus on a group of sanctuaries, Sørensen analyses ceramics from all three locations in order to clarify whether there are correlating find distributions in this area of the eastern Mediterranean.⁵⁰ Again, the issue of published material is raised, but this time in the context that many studies carried out with this type of analysis are inherently biased.⁵¹ By focusing exclusively on the different fabric categories from the Archaic period (seventh to sixth centuries BC), Sørensen attempts to identify the changing patterns of trade in the three areas so that interaction can be proven.⁵² This data is displayed chronologically by find location, fabric and vase type.⁵³ The observations clearly show a variation in which ceramics were being traded in the different locations.⁵⁴ The diversity of pottery discovered on shipwrecks certainly supports this theory, and also implies that particular types were deliberately chosen because of their popularity overseas.⁵⁵

While the data certainly provides insights into the interactions in this area of the Mediterranean during the Archaic period, there are some issues regarding the display of the information to the observer. The data in the tables is from two periods at Naukratis and demonstrates some of the inconsistencies that stem from the presentation of the information (see Tables 2.1-2, p.67).

⁵⁴ For an example of this variation see the observations regarding East Greek pottery in Cyprus during the sixth century BC (Ibid, 153).

⁵⁵ The large number of Chian pots at Naukratis suggests a trade in these ceramics rather than them being used to fill the empty space on ships carrying alternative cargoes (Ibid, 157).

Although the tables seem clear and easy enough to understand, they do not maintain a consistent system, which is essential for clarity. In the first table (seventh century BC), the pottery categories are identical for each find location. In the second table (c.550-c.525 BC), all the sites have different fabric categories. In addition to this, the vase types listed in column one change depending on which table is being consulted. Hydria, which is listed as the fourth category in the second table, is not mentioned at all in the first and this can result in some confusion. Maintaining a consistent system across all tables displayed would have avoided this issue.

Baumbach, 2004: The Significance of Votive Offerings in Selected Hera Sanctuaries in the Peloponnese, Ionia and Western Greece

Like Kristensen, Baumbach explores the material evidence from a variety of sanctuaries, in this case those dedicated to Hera. One interesting observation made in the introduction is the fact that dedications and deities, no matter how similar in outward appearance, may not have represented identical cults. Local variations and different interpretations need to be taken into account.⁵⁸ Our knowledge of the Kabeiroi and the fact that there are multiple definitions of who the deities were and what they represented provides us with a useful introduction to the possible variations in spite of their outward similarities. Baumbach relies on the analysis of the material offerings from a variety of perspectives, the necessity for a suitable corpus of evidence is paramount. Once more there are constraining factors regarding which sanctuaries can be used, as excavation reports and other publications must possess the necessary data.⁵⁹ As the aim of this study was to discuss the possibility of variation in the Hera cults, analysis was performed thematically rather than by material type (Figure 2.5).⁶⁰

In terms of problems arising during the study, the issues appear very similar to those highlighted by Kristensen. Along with the previously acknowledged aspects such as the limited amount of data published to the required level, there were also further concerns regarding the lack of recorded find contexts and the omission of accurate numbers of finds from the sanctuaries.⁶² The conclusions support the initial findings that sanctuaries to the same deity might not have had the same focus. Baumbach's conclusions show that whilst different votive offerings are present at each of the sanctuaries, the proportions vary significantly. The result is that the particular focal point of each sanctuary is aimed at different traits in the goddess' character.⁶³

2.3.3 The Selection of Comparative Sites

The process of selection is naturally limited by the available material. A new and revised catalogue of the Kabeiric centres and sites with their connections to the deities has been compiled using publications previously available on this subject.⁶⁴ These alternative gods include the Megaloi Theoi and the Samothracian Theoi, along with other groups of deities such as the Dioscouroi, Curetes, Telchines and Anakes. In addition, several more divine names emerged, with references to Aphrodite, Hermes, Zeus and Apollo along with various others from the Greek pantheon. This produced a sample of 158 potential comparative sites within Greece, Asia Minor, Thrace, the Black Sea, Egypt, India, Phoenicia and the Western Mediterranean.

To limit the number of sites involved the deities at these locations were the deciding factor. The difficulties in distinguishing between the Kabeiroi, the Megaloi Theoi and the Samothracian Theoi resulted in the restriction of the sites dedicated to these gods. This judgment was based on the discussion regarding the similarities and issues surrounding the separation of the three groups of divinities within Chapter 1. The remaining sample was therefore reduced to 102 which is still a sizable number. Also acknowledged is the fact that this would need to be compressed further and limited to those sites suitable for comparative purposes. The resulting catalogue recorded the site's name, location and material evidence for its existence. This data was then divided into the following categories: buildings, Entering the information into a database, with simple yes/no categories, proved to be an exceedingly easy way to record all of the available evidence for each of the 102 sites.⁶⁵ During the cataloguing phase the sites were divided into geographical categories and subdivided into regional groupings (Table 2.3, p.71 and Figures 2.7-10, p.72-73). It was originally hoped to compare Kabeiric sites from all the geographical areas, but the lack of excavations or publications proved to be problematic.

2.3.4 The Suitability of the Material

What is noticeable with the studies of both Kristensen and Baumbach is the problem of accessible data. The dismissal of potentially interesting sites due to inadequate (or non-existent) publication is a significant issue with regard to any artefact-based study. Although attempts can be made to provide a more generalising view of the material from a sanctuary, this is not a suitable replacement for accurate data.⁶⁸ Out of 102 sites only four, if Thebes is included in the total (five if Ilion is added), have any excavation information published, and the issues noted by Kristensen and Baumbach become very apparent.⁶⁹ This is due to the fact that the majority of the sites are preserved only in coinage, primary literature and inscriptions. Even with sanctuaries that do have publications, the reports often fail to contain or only provide a small portion of the necessary data. There are still further limitations regarding the ceramic data from the three suitable sites of Delos, Lemnos and Samothrace.

Delos

Whilst Delos has an exceedingly comprehensive series of excavation reports, Exploration Archéologique de Délos, the ceramic volumes are lacking. Unfortunately, of the six volumes publishing the ceramics from the French excavations, only three contain information regarding find contexts,⁷⁰ and those detailed are inadequate. Volume 17 records the area in which the ceramics were found, namely 'the sanctuary of the Foreign Gods',⁷¹ with this area encompassing a significant number of structures dedicated to a variety of foreign deities, including the Kabeirion/Samothrakeion. Furthermore, the remaining volumes 26 and 31 detail the finds located inside and to the south of the sanctuary.⁷² Doubts can be raised over the validity of the material supposedly found at the site as the excavator stated that no ceramics were actually discovered at the sanctuary.⁷³ This suggests that the finds from within the complex mentioned by both Bruneau and Laumonier are from elsewhere. The inconsistencies in the find contexts and in the comments presented in the different volumes means that Delos is not a credible site for comparative purposes.

⁶⁸ Kristensen, 2001: 64-65.

Lemnos

In contrast with Delos, the material from the Kabeirion on Lemnos is more thoroughly documented, although find contexts can be vague and often only confirm that the piece originated from within the sanctuary. As the full excavation reports have not been published, the information available is only from brief annual reports and conference papers,⁷⁴ which focus primarily on the plain and coarse cooking wares. There does nevertheless appear to be some strong similarities between the material culture of the Lemnian and Theban Kabeiria.⁷⁵

Samothrace

Samothrace is the best published of all the Kabeiric sites. There are long-standing academic arguments over the exact classification of the deities worshipped there, namely the Great Gods of Samothrace and whether they are indeed connected to (or an alias of) the Kabeiroi or the Megaloi Theoi.⁷⁶ The resemblances in cult type and the rituals performed would clearly indicate that these deities have a common association. The material is well published (if incomplete) in the series, Samothrace: Excavations conducted by the Institute of Fine Arts of New York University. Several volumes are yet to be produced, including the important volume on the anaktoron, sacristy and the earlier levels below the Arsinoeion and anaktoron.⁷⁷ The publications that are available have detailed information on approximately 1200 ceramic objects; this makes the material exceptionally suitable for this type of study.

2.3.5 Control Methods

The original plan for this thesis had included the comparison of material from mainland Greece and other areas of the eastern Mediterranean with the ceramic corpus of the Theban Kabeirion. Unfortunately this was limited in its scope, as the best evidence came from the two Aegean islands of Lemnos and Samothrace situated in close proximity to one another. This resulted in the decision to research other cults in order to provide the control sites for correlation with the data gathered from Kabeiric cult centres. This would allow for a fully informed opinion to be made over the interpretation of the Theban material and confirm if trends and anomalies are exclusive to the Boeotian sanctuary or if they are more widespread.

In order to achieve this, sites suitable for comparative purposes need to be identified, meaning that the necessary sanctuaries require excavated ceramic material published to an acceptable level. The situation is more complicated than just selecting sites with the necessary material, and was resolved by including comparative data from sanctuaries that were dedicated to both mystery cults and those that were not. To ensure a balanced study, sanctuaries dedicated to divinities of both genders were included in the comparisons. Although the Kabeiroi at Thebes are generally identified as male, there was a Mother Goddess and her consort also worshipped in conjunction with these lesser gods.⁷⁸ By cross-referencing the ceramics from sanctuaries dedicated to the goddesses at other sites, it may be possible to confirm the existence and function of this deity at Thebes.

⁷⁷ The other missing volumes on the archaeology cover the structures on the west and east hills; also another on the history and religion of the site has yet to be published.

After careful consideration seven sanctuaries not connected to the Kabeiroi or similar gods were selected (Figure 2.11). The material available is drawn from the Greek mainland or from areas in close proximity to it. Bearing in mind the existence of Kabeiric sanctuaries in the North Aegean, it would have been preferable to have further island sites to use for comparative purposes but there is a lack of suitable excavated sites.

Mystery Cult Centres

It is perhaps logical to choose for comparative purposes those sanctuaries associated with Eleusis or the worship of Demeter and Persephone. Eleusis' position as one of the great Pan-Hellenic sanctuaries of ancient Greece merely reinforces its importance in the study of the mystery religions.⁷⁹ The close alliance of Demeter with the Great Mother worshipped at Thebes and other Kabeiric centres also supports this decision.⁸⁰ As with the Kabeiric sanctuaries, there are issues over the matter of publication. The excavations at Eleusis do not have the ceramics published in a satisfactory format for the method of analysis chosen for this project, and there are also two other problematic sanctuaries. Firstly, the Eleusinion in the Athenian Agora has only been partially excavated; the resulting volume in the American School's series only includes the ceramics and cult vessels from the excavations in 1936-1939 and 1959-1960⁸¹ greatly limiting the conclusions that can be drawn from this site. More importantly, the format of the publication also presents complications as the catalogue arranges the pottery by context, with little information regarding the specific details of the material (Figure 2.12). The second sanctuary, dedicated to Demeter and Persephone at Corinth, is fully excavated and the ceramics, including the lamps, published in two volumes.⁸² Like the Theban Kabeirion there is some attestation that points towards a common origin for the rituals. For example, the Corinthian sanctuary has rock-cut features which could be interpreted as being small theatres and dining facilities; both reflect elements from the Theban site.⁸³

The decision not to create a catalogue of the material from these sites was mainly due to the issues regarding the publication of material from Athens and Eleusis. Nevertheless, the views based on the literature and archaeology are valuable for their insight into the operation and activities of a mystery cult and cannot be ignored.

Non-Mystery Cult Centres

The aim of the control sites not related to the mystery cults was to determine whether ceramic usage was characteristic of worship of the Kabeiroi only, mystery cults as a group or Greek sanctuaries in general. It had been hoped to include ceramic comparisons with sites in the Greek islands, Asia Minor, Thrace or the Black Sea. However, the excavation reports proved to be unsuitable which meant that the sites chosen were restricted to the Greek mainland. The only exception is the island sanctuary of Poseidon, but one in close proximity to the Peloponnese. As previously mentioned, sanctuaries dedicated to gods of both genders were included to see if any correlating or contradictory patterns existed. The aim was to use sites which had achieved full publication of the ceramics. As Kristensen noted, the material is often inadequately presented in volumes predating the modern standards of archaeological reporting.⁸⁵ Owing to the dependency on suitable publications, all the sites selected for comparison were from the Peloponnese. It is clear from previous studies of offerings dedicated to the same deity that they varied greatly in their purpose and interpretation with other cult centres based in different areas of the Greek world.⁸⁶ Even inside the Kabeiric cult there is variation, with Thebes and Lemnos displaying very different functions.⁸⁷ Baumbach recognised this in his study of Hera sanctuaries, but also notes that while the cult centres may have had different purposes, the offerings were frequently the same, with only the emphasis changed.⁸⁸ Therefore, comparative material from these Peloponnesian sites was appropriate for the study. This was based on the principle that despite the possibility of variations, there would be enough similarities in the ceramics to draw satisfactory conclusions. This is supported by the premise that the material from the corresponding sites is incorporated as a means of identifying trends and anomalies that belong purely to the mystery cults as a group.

Of the four sanctuaries, two are dedicated to male and two to female deities. It had been hoped to use the ceramic evidence from a site devoted to Dionysos as this god influenced the iconography of the Theban cult so heavily. Unfortunately, no suitable sanctuaries were available and alternative sites had to be used. Therefore the two male sites were chosen on the basis that dining was a feature of the cult. One is the sanctuary of Zeus at Nemea which has possible dining rooms as part of the complex to house participants at the Nemean Games.⁸⁹ As the ceramics from the site have not been published properly this choice may seem peculiar. The preliminary excavation reports contain detailed information regarding the ceramics there and their find contexts.⁹⁰ As a significant proportion of the finds from Thebes do not have any specific stratigraphic references, comparing the types of finds located in particular contexts at another Greek sanctuary is useful. There are numerous groups of finds at Nemea which were discovered in what are classified as sacrificial deposits.⁹¹ It is worth noting that, while there are occasional references to ash layers within the Theban Kabeirion containing pottery, they are not as widespread as Nemea.⁹² Like Nemea, the sanctuary of Poseidon on Poros was chosen for comparative purposes as it also has dining facilities but again publication is limited to detailed preliminary excavation reports.⁹³ This time the facilities seem to have a ritual function rather than the practical usage at Nemea. Although the ⁹¹ For one example see Miller, 1981: 60-65, there are also a large number of similar deposits known.

modern excavation report only relates to one building, it is particularly interesting that there appears to be some connection, architecturally at least, to the sanctuary of Demeter and Persephone at Corinth.⁹⁴

The sanctuaries of Hera at Perachora and Artemis Orthia at Sparta were selected as the female comparative sites for this study. Again this was based not only on the available ceramic publications, but also on the architectural features at the sites drawing comparisons with Thebes. At Perachora there are dining rooms forming part of the cult complex, one of which had a central hearth reflecting the circular and rectangular dining structures of the Theban Kabeirion.⁹⁵ The sanctuary of Artemis Orthia is known primarily for the peculiar rituals often associated with it,⁹⁶ the activities bearing a striking similarity to the Theban cult of the Kabeiroi. A large number of terracotta masks were uncovered during the excavations at the site and these represent an anomaly in the archaeological record as they do not appear in the data from other sanctuaries of a comparable date.⁹⁷ We know that actors wore masks in Athens and that miniature versions were dedicated to Dionysos after a performance but there is no evidence to assume a similar practice at the Spartan cult.⁹⁸ The worship of the goddess Orthia at the sanctuary, and the popularity of masks, all point to a Near Eastern origin for the cult;⁹⁹ reflecting the Anatolian origin of the Kabeiroi.¹⁰⁰ It is important to note that as many of the masks could have been worn, it is distinctly possible that cult activities may have involved re-enactments of some of the key events relating to the goddess, but there is no iconographic or literary evidence relating to Artemis Orthia which would support this idea. There is the possibility that priests in the cult of Dionysos may have once worn masks to invoke the presence of the god, but again this is mainly supposition.¹⁰¹ At Thebes there are numerous vase images depicting figures who are very obviously wearing masks. Whilst a number of the images are of a theatrical origin, suggesting that plays were performed at the sanctuary, there are a small number which seem to have no relationship to the stage at all. More interestingly, a small number of theatrical masks were found at the Theban sanctuary dating from the fifth to third centuries BC.¹⁰² The use of masks in anthropological studies does highlight strong ritual features, especially in the context of a mask representing a god.¹⁰³

2.4 The Approaches to the Data

2.4.1 The Collection and Recording of the Data

All the information was organised into individual databases. The Theban database was more detailed than that compiled for the comparative sites. This provided the information for the chapters on ceramics and was used as the basis for the vase catalogue. For the other sanctuaries the entry form was simplified further, as detailed iconographic information was not always readily available. The recording of all the ceramic material in the same manner for the comparative sites was based upon the conclusion that the standardisation of the entry systems would facilitate correlation and analysis. There were some variations in the criteria used depending on the information included in the publications of the ceramics, with the material for Nemea being catalogued differently.

Access to the material from the Kabeirion was complicated by the fact that a significant number of the vases did not have their current location recorded in the publications. Many without museum listings can be attributed to the National Archaeological Museum in Athens, but there is still a large proportion which may be residing in the Archaeological Museum at Thebes, the German Archaeological Institute in Athens or at an institution in Germany. The nature of this study was not dependent on physical access to the material, so it was decided to restrict fieldwork to those vases which had known locations. Visits to various museums enabled evaluation of some selected material,¹⁰⁴ including some vases whose publication records were unclear (i.e. poor photographic reproduction, etc). Further visits were carried out to some of the Kabeiric sites used for comparative purposes and their associated museums.¹⁰⁵

¹⁰² The known masks from the Kabeiroi are catalogued in Wolters, 1890: 364 and Schmaltz, 1974: 181 Nos.352-361, 182.

Entry Criteria for the Theban Ceramics (Figure 2.13, p.85)

- A. Catalogue Number (Abbreviation Cat. No.): Numbers were given to all objects within the database in chronological order by their type classification.
- B. Museum/Collection & City: Identification of the object's current location (the inventory number can be found under category B). As the whereabouts of a vast amount of the ceramics is unknown, it is presumed that the material not attributed to museums or collections is currently being held by either the Archaeological Museum in Thebes, the National Archaeological Museum in Athens, the German Archaeological School, (also in Athens) or at an academic institution or museum in Germany.
- C. Inventory Number (Abbreviation Inv. No.): The number given to the object in the publication during excavation or by museum accession.
- D. Plate: Reference/hyperlink to the corresponding image(s), these are stored as plates in a PDF format on the CD-Rom.
- E. Object: Function of ceramic object, if known. Those unidentified pieces were classified as Unknown or Fragment(s).

- Allard Pierson Museum, Amsterdam, Netherlands.
- Archaeological Museum, Thebes, Boeotia, Greece.
- Goulandris Museum, Athens, Attica, Greece.
- National Archaeological Museum, Athens, Attica, Greece.
- Ure Museum of Classical Art and Archaeology, University of Reading, Reading, United Kingdom.

For the vase from the Royal Ontario Museum in Toronto, Canada, photographs were provided by S. Thomas, Depts of Archaeology & Scottish History, University of Glasgow.

¹⁰⁵ For the Kabeiric sites, visits were made to the Kabeirion and Thebes Archaeological Museum, as well as the sanctuaries on Delos and Lemnos and the Archaeological Museum in Myrina, Lemnos.

- F. Condition: Detailed description of the object. The key terms used were fragment (or fragments), partial, complete or restored. In addition, if the piece was not complete or restored, brief descriptions were provided if any features remained, such as rims, handles or bases.
- G. Height/Width/Other Dimensions: Detailed dimensions of the vessel or fragment.
- H. Fabric: Type/source of clay. Again a large proportion of objects lacked information regarding their manufacturing provenance or had clays that were ambiguous, (see the large number of vases identified as Attic/Boeotian as an example).
- I. Type: Used purely for simplification purposes within the database, this allowed for the easy classification of material into certain types. Some object types were separated by shape rather than by decoration because of their significance within the cult. The categories were Geometric, black figure, Panathenaic amphorae, bells, spinning tops, red figure, plastic vessels, relief wares, black glaze, west slope ware, terra sigillata, plain/coarse wares and lamps (there was also one object which fell into the unknown category).
- J. Decoration: This comprised a full description of scenes and the other decoration of the vases and fragments.
- K. Date: Specific dates, if known were included and also if the item was perceived to belong to a specific time period, i.e. Archaic, Classical, etc. A significant number of objects lacked this information.
- L. Artist: If the vessel can be attributed to a known vase painter this information was included.
- M. Find Context: Included if the object had a specific find context. However, a significant proportion (approximately 1900 vases from the Kabeirion) do not have any information regarding this category.
- N. Provenance: Although specific find contexts were often lacking, more generalised provenances were occasionally given, but frequently these only amount to approximate regional classifications.
- O. Bibliography: Refers to the volume/article in which the object was published. For the series Das Kabirenheiligtum bei Theben, the abbreviation KH was used followed by the appropriate volume number, page references, catalogue number and plates. Other volumes follow the standard Harvard format (author, date: page/image references).

Entry Criteria for the Comparison Sites (excluding Nemea)

As the comparative sites did not require the same level of detail as the Theban material, the database was simplified further and Table 2.4 (p.87) summarises the criteria used for these sites.

Entry Criteria for Nemea (Figure 2.14)

With the evidence from Nemea only being published in the excavation reports, rather than a finalised catalogue, the format of the database had to be very different. The fact that this was one of the few sites with detailed context information warranted its inclusion, and it was decided to catalogue the pottery by context rather than by type. This would allow for the evaluation regarding the types of ceramics found together at a sanctuary and in what feature.

2.4.2 The Presentation of the Data

As the body of material contained within the catalogues is of a significant size, the inclusion of a standard printed version in the thesis was not considered suitable for the presentation of the information. Instead the catalogues have been converted to HTML¹⁰⁶ and uploaded to a CD to create an interactive CD-Rom.¹⁰⁷ By using HTML the CD-Rom is able to run from any web-based browser (i.e. Internet Explorer, Firefox, etc.). This CD-Rom contains all of the catalogues in PDF¹⁰⁸ format (Figure 2.15, p.90), the vase plates and the relevant bibliographies used for each site (for an index of the CD-Rom, see Appendix B).

Acknowledging the fact that moving between the thesis and the catalogues could prove inefficient and awkward, the relevant tables were incorporated within the chapters. The majority of these were abbreviated and designed to show only the information from the relevant criteria. These abridged tables were generally only included for certain categories, primarily vase painters and find contexts. The full catalogue entries, if desired, can be found on the CD-Rom and the same practice is also used for the requisite images. Certain tables, especially those of particular vase painters or find contexts, are lengthy and when a table was deemed to be overly long and disruptive to the flow of the thesis, it was relocated into an appendix at the end of the relevant chapter. By keeping the tables simple and abbreviated allowed the statements in the thesis to be supported but not overwhelmed.

2.4.3 The Interpretation of the Data

In order to interpret the material properly it was necessary to approach the data from a number of perspectives which would then be drawn together in the conclusions. As already established in 2.2.2, the thesis combines the archaeological evidence with the iconographic.

¹⁰⁷ Standard abbreviation for Compact Disc Read-Only Memory.

¹⁰⁸ Standard abbreviation for Portable Document Format.

It was also important to include a ceramic typology to explain the function and relevance of the different types of vase shape to the cult. By combining this information with a chronological approach was thought to be the best manner in which to present and interpret the data. This allowed for trends and anomalies to be recognised and discussed in more detail and explanations sought.

In addition to the chronological approach, the types of vases in use within a specific period¹⁰⁹ and also their find contexts were considered. There were however only a limited number of objects with known find contexts or provenances from the ceramic corpus. By understanding the relationship between the discarded or deposited ceramics and the architectural features it should provide a significant amount of information on the activities at the cult centre.¹¹⁰ It will also be interesting to explore whether any of the iconographic themes from the provenanced ceramics have any direct correlation with those structures whose function is known. If there is a discernible relationship between iconography and structure it should also be possible to confirm the function of those buildings whose purpose has not yet been established.

Finally, the iconography itself will be considered. The images from the Kabeiric vases remain one of our most valuable sources for this sanctuary. Many believe that the scenes show activities at the site, and there is the possibility that they provide important information on the cult centre. By approaching these ceramics using the principle that repetition equals importance,¹¹¹ it is possible to classify the iconographic scenes from the site and discuss the categories in greater detail. The interaction and influence of one painter with another is important to our understanding of the production of these ceramics.¹¹² Both the iconography and the vase painters provide us with knowledge on the social aspects of the sanctuary. A significant number of the vases at the complex were dedications, which means that the iconography must have been of importance to the patrons who purchased them for the deity.¹¹³ The scenes must also have had a direct relevance to the sanctuary – otherwise their presence is unexplainable. We know from other incidences that individuals displayed a strong tendency to choose certain vases for specific activities,¹¹⁴ and the fact that Kabeiric Ware is only seen at the sanctuary actually emphasises this theory.¹¹⁵

Chapter Three

Vases: Form and Function

3.1 Introduction

The ceramics of the Kabeirion represent a significant proportion of the excavated evidence available and it is important to appreciate the role these vessels played in cult activities. As Jones clearly states, figured vases and ceramics have often only been studied on a stylistic level; their practical attributes have been ignored.¹ Function is overlooked, relegating vases to items of artistic merit only. What is presented here attempts to redress this imbalance. The following discussion presents a catalogue, by shape, of the sanctuary's excavated ceramics. This explores their decoration, main purpose and periods of use during the sanctuary's lifespan and offers interpretations for the vessel's specific function within the cult. Further consideration is given to representations of vases within decorative scenes as an aid to their interpretation.

As the majority of the literature is based upon the standard definitions, this section primarily uses the information from Richter and Milne's Shapes and Names of Athenian Vases,² Kanowski's Containers of Classical Greece,³ Rasmussen and Spivey's *Looking at Greek Vases*⁴ and R. Cook's Greek Painted Pottery.⁵ Any other works used will be cited in the descriptions.

3.2 Amphorae and Related Shapes

3.2.1 Amphora (Ἀμφορεύς)

The Greek name amphoreus, (Latin amphora), is derived from the Greek amphi (on both sides) and phoros (carrying). The name is given to those vases possessing two handles for transportation. The body is wider than the neck and the mouth. Amphorae are usually divided into two categories – neck amphora and one-piece amphora. Better quality examples were used as wine containers and decanters, whilst Panathenaic and other forms held olive oil.

1. Neck Amphora: The term neck amphora is applied when the neck meets the body at an angle and is descended from Mycenaean prototypes. This form had grooves within the lip in order to take a lid or stopper suggesting that they were used for export and contained goods such as oil or wine.⁷
2. One-Piece Amphora: In this form the neck, shoulder and body join together in a more flowing curve.
3. Storage Amphora: The coarse ware examples of this form were used as general all-purpose containers to store a variety of products, much like the barrels and casks of later periods.

⁷ Boardman, 1989: 239.

As the primary forms of amphorae found at the sanctuary are the coarse or plain varieties, it would indicate that these examples are present in the archaeological record as a result of produce being brought in. This is supported by iconographic evidence from a Kabeiric Ware skyphos (Figure 3.2), which clearly depicts a number of amphorae being conveyed to a site. It is accepted that the Kabeiric vases decorated with such scenes directly reflect the activities at the sanctuary. The predominance of drinking cups and alcohol-themed paraphernalia would imply that these amphorae carried wine rather than oil.

3.2.2 Panathenaic Amphora

Although distinctive by its shape, the amphora is very similar in form to the pointed transport amphora, but has a narrower neck for controlled pouring. The diagram of amphora shapes shows clearly the similarities in the silhouette. Their function was as olive oil filled prizes for the Athenian Panathenaic Games, attested by the frequently used inscription 'from the games in Athens' (ΤΩΝ ΑΘΗΝΗΩΕΝ ΑΘΛΩΝ). The lifespan of this shape ran from c.560 BC until the second century BC, or possibly later. They were always decorated in black figure, which remained the technique even throughout the red figure period and can be divided into two categories – the prize and the non-prize varieties.⁹ The latter type tended to be miniature versions, which may have been produced as souvenirs for spectators. Recent work by Bentz has re-dated a number of the Panathenaic amphora from the Kabeirion (Table 3.1a-b, p.96).¹⁰

The Panathenaic amphorae at the sanctuary clearly represent a common dedicatory practice. The relative size of the fragments would signify that these are full-sized examples rather than miniature souvenirs. Presumably these are amphorae won at the Panathenaic Games by Boeotian participants and then dedicated in the sanctuary.

The fragmentary nature of the Panathenaic amphorae could offer two possibilities. Firstly, the vases were deliberately smashed as part of the ritual activities. Secondly, they were destroyed during a period of anti-Athenian sentiment. The occupation of Thebes by Sparta in the early fourth century BC would provide such an occasion. However, Panathenaic amphorae are found at the sanctuary until the second century BC which points to the conclusion that ritual may better explain their fragmentary state.

3.2.3 Amphoriskos (Ἀμφορίσκος)

A miniature version of the amphora, these fulfilled the same purpose as other small vessels, namely unguent or perfume containers. They are found mainly within graves, presumably as a low-cost form of votive offering.

3.2.4 Loutrophoros (Λουτροφόρος)

The term derives from the Greek loutron, (bathing water), and phoros (carrying). This name has connections with rituals in Athens where it was applied to the individual who carried water from the spring for ritual washing before a wedding. The vessel was also used at the funerals of those young persons who died unmarried, and there are examples in either ceramic or marble being used as grave markers. Although it has the same features and is a derivative of the neck amphora,¹¹ the overall shape is elongated and much slimmer. There are some types of late Geometric amphorae which resemble the loutrophoros form, suggesting that the loutrophoros is likely to be an evolved form of the amphora, albeit one not suitable for everyday use due to the fragility of the shape. This weakness is emphasised by the fact that so many exist only as fragments.

The presence of only a single loutrophoros fragment is curious (Table 3.2a, p.135) and two possibilities can be considered; firstly, that it was dedicated by an individual shortly before or after marriage in order to receive goodwill from the gods. Secondly, it could contribute to the practice of sacred marriage which some scholars believe took place at the site,¹² and there are reputed to be three vases showing such images (Figure 3.3, p.99, see Chapter 6 for the full discussion). It could be argued that there was a ritual practised at the sanctuary bearing similarities to the Hieros Gamos at Athens of Dionysos and the Basilinna.¹³ We know that at the sanctuary of Hera in Plataea in Boeotia, the celebration of sacred marriage was performed, so it could be presumed that the Thebans were also fully aware of such a ritual.¹⁴ However, due to the fact that there is only one dedicated loutrophoros, and a maximum of three iconographic scenes, the first interpretation associating it with an individual's marriage is more likely to be correct.

3.2.5 Pelike (Πελίκη)

A term used to describe a vessel which is similar to the one-piece amphora with a sagging belly.¹⁶ While amphorae carry the greatest width at the shoulder, the pelike is wider in its lower half. The mouth is wide and gets wider in later examples. Though changes in the shape are minimal throughout its lifespan, alterations in decoration become more noticeable. The evidence from the iconography intimates that it could be employed to contain oil or wine or utilised to draw water. The origin of the name is unclear. From the style of this piece it would possibly have been used in a symposiastic setting, presumably for the storage of wine.

3.2.6 Stamnos (Στάμνος)

A wide-mouthed pot, broader in the upper part of the body and with an offset neck sometimes reduced to a collar. Handles are set horizontally on the belly and there may also be a low foot. There are some resemblances in shape to the amphora; indeed some styles of amphora are often called stamnoid amphorae. In Attica there are Bronze Age and Geometric predecessors sharing some similarities of form. The main function of this vessel seems to have been to store wine, although some illustrations show it being used in a manner akin to a krater. The shape can be decorated in both black and red figure, though red figure is the dominant decorative technique. As the example from the Kabeirion is fine ware, it would seem likely that this piece was used within a symposiastic context.

3.3 Hydria (Υδρία)

The name was probably given to a variety of vase shapes used to carry water, and in modern usage it only applies to one form. The main characteristics are the three handles: two horizontal on the sides for carrying and a single vertical for ease of pouring. The earliest designs show the hydria to be a vessel sharing many similarities with amphorae from this period. By the mid sixth century a triangular silhouette with broad and relatively flat shoulders had emerged. The shape evolved again by becoming slimmer at the end of the sixth century. By 500 BC a one-piece model appears which continued in use well into the Hellenistic period and, as with the other forms, became slimmer over time. From the fourth century black glaze versions are known, but coarse ware examples remain in use over the shape's lifespan. There are also instances of this vessel in metal,¹⁸ and on the basis of the fourth century date and the decoration technique, it was probably used within a symposiastic setting.

3.4 Oinochoai and Related Shapes¹⁹

3.4.1 Oinochoe (Οἰνοχόη)

Formed from the Greek oinos (wine) and chēo (I pour), the word is applied to the majority of jug types, though this excludes the olpe and the lagynos (see below). The number of oinochoe forms is debatable; Beazley identified 10.²¹

1. Trefoil mouth, offset neck, oval body and high handle.
2. Trefoil mouth, offset neck, oval body and low handle. From the mid sixth century BC to the end of red figure.

²¹ Beazley, 1963: xlix-li.

3. Trefoil mouth, globular one-piece body and low handle. This form is often labelled as a chous. From the mid sixth century BC.
4. Flat or round mouth, offset neck, globular body and high handle. Probably from the fifth century BC.
5. Round mouth, slender one-piece body and low handle. Similar in form to the olpe.
6. Beaked mouth, angular one-piece body and low handle. From the late sixth to the mid fifth century BC.
7. Beaked mouth, offset neck, oval body and low handle.
8. Short, plump body and vertical handle. This form is often labelled as a mug. From the sixth to fifth century BC.
9. Round mouth, squat one-piece body and high handle. From the mid fifth century BC.
10. Beaked mouth, offset neck, oval body and high handle.

Richter and Milne only list five, with variations.²² The basic type follows the characteristics set by the amphora. One version has a neck and shoulder meeting at an angle (offset), and the second is a one-piece form. Of Beazley's conventions the following observations can be made in regard to some of its attributes. Most will agree that one of the primary functions of the shape is for the decanting of wine, moving wine from a large container into a cup. The importance of this vase in social and ritual circumstances cannot be denied. The vase would also have had many other uses. Most of the iconographic evidence for the oinochoe shows it being utilised specifically for the pouring of wine. The majority of the scenes depict it being dipped into kraters or other mixing vessels, and then used to pour the contents into the drinking cup of a symposium participant.

3.4.2 Lagynos

A later form of oinochoe that had a reasonably flat body, tall thin neck, small lip and broad flat handle extending from the lip to the top of the body. This shape is often described as a flask in vase catalogues.

3.5.1 Aryballos (Ἀρύβαλλος)

A small narrow-necked oil flask which had strong connections to athletes. The form was designed to be attached to an individual's wrist by means of a thong. A round ball-like shape is the most common type, but more elongated forms are found. Examples shaped like human heads and other curiosities also exist. For the round type Beazley divided the group into two:

1. Corinthian: Globular body, rounded base, single handle joining the body to a broad disc-shaped mouth. Common from the mid seventh to fifth centuries BC. Widely imitated throughout Greece, Asia Minor and Italy.
2. Attic: Round body, hemispherical mouth (like that of a lekythos), two narrow spurred handles joining body to mouth. In production from the end of the sixth to the beginning of the fourth century BC.

Ovoid and piriform styles are common in areas with Corinthian influence during the Middle and Late Protocorinthian periods. There are a number of illustrations of aryballoi on painted vase scenes; these show the vessel being used by men who either have the aryballos suspended from their wrist by a thong (Figure 3.7, p.104), or are pouring oil from the vessel for massage of the limbs. A hydria by the ²⁵ Jongkees-Vos, 1972: Pl.15.1.

There are two representations of aryballoi on vessels from the Kabeirion (Cat. Nos. 75, Figure 3.7 (p.104), (Pl.18c) & 146). Both of these scenes are caricatured or mythological in subject and the role of aryballoi at the Kabeirion cannot, on the basis of the evidence, be argued conclusively. Considering that there does seem to be an athletic component to the sanctuary's activities, a connection to the aryballoi could be indicated. Aryballoi were a popular votive offering at a large number of cult centres with both male and female deities receiving such dedications. What makes the Theban centre more unusual is the apparent lack of this type of vessel. We know that trade links existed as large numbers of Corinthian aryballoi appear with great frequency at Boeotian cemeteries such as Mykalessos (modern Rhitsona).²⁶ What can be proposed is that whilst the aryballos was the dominant unguent container at many other centres, at Thebes it was ignored in favour of other forms, particularly the unguentarium.

It should be made clear that the apex of aryballoi production and exchange are contemporary with the foundation of the sanctuary. We cannot state that aryballoi are scant because they were not easily available. The dedications at the site during these periods were dominated primarily by metal votives and this could bring to light a different interpretation. The cult was, in one of its earliest incarnations, a sanctuary fostered by herdsmen seeking divine protection for their livestock.²⁷ The situation is clearer if the evidence from the other unguent containers present at the sanctuary is assessed. Equally apparent is the fact that this type of vessel only becomes a popular dedication in the centuries after the metal livestock offerings have declined. This means that the aryballos was not a favoured offering for the Kabeiroi despite being remarkably common in Boeotia.

3.5.2 Lekythos (Λήκυθος)²⁸

The name lekythos is now applied to a number of related shapes which are relatively small in size, although there is an exception, namely the white ground type used in funerary contexts. They were normally chosen as containers for oil and perfumed oil, and also as tableware. This design has a long history within Greek ceramics with examples dating to the Protogeometric period. By the Geometric period the form is fairly globular. It was in the sixth century that it changed drastically, with a longish oval body, short narrow neck, broad mouth, rounded lip, low foot and strap-like handle. Later during this phase the shoulder and base become more angular. In terms of decoration there are numerous examples of both black and red figure. The squat form of lekythos appears c.400 BC, the early ones are more globular, the later tending to be thinner. A number of lekythoi have a small ridge on the interior of their mouths to control the pouring rate of the oil.

²⁶ Burrows and Ure, P., 1909: 310.

²⁸ Kanowski, 1984: under Lekythos; Cook, R., 1997: 221-222.

Another form of lekythos not found at the Kabeirion, but important in regard to the history of the form, is the white ground lekythos which begins in the fifth century BC. These lekythoi have strong funerary associations. The scenes upon these vases depict myth, everyday life, funerary rituals and the actions of the deceased. Often the vases show images of the tomb with lekythoi as offerings around it.

The lekythoi from the sanctuary can be divided into two distinct groups; the black and red figure types would have contained perfumes or oils and been used as dedications, while the black glaze examples are more likely to have been tableware items.

3.5.3 Askos (Ἀσκός), or Guttus²⁹

The askos was the name applied in antiquity to wine containers made from skin. The sway-backed shape of these vessels has suggested to some that it resembles the skin wine containers, but this name is an entirely modern usage. The body of the Attic form can differ greatly, varying from a relatively flat shape to one that is rather deep. The mouth and handle tend to follow a similar pattern from vase to vase, the mouth is small and the handle usually sweeps across the top of the vase joining at the mouth and the opposite side of the body. The guttus is very similar in shape, but has a vertical neck and smaller ring handle. The history of this shape stretches from the Geometric period onwards, although there are some forms from the Mycenaean period which have similar features. As a fine ware piece the askos appears in Athens from the early fifth century and may reflect trends in East Greek pottery. In terms of popularity it continued for a long time in the west as there are examples present in the ceramic record from the Geometric period. The small size of this vase makes it useful for unguents, and Hoffmann defines the guttus as a 'small vessel for an offering of oil at the tomb'³⁰ – indicating that one of the functions of this vase was connected to funerary ritual. Larger examples may have contained other liquids. Like the black and red figure lekythoi, the askoi from the sanctuary were probably dedication pieces containing perfume or oil.

3.5.4 Unguentarium³¹

A long cylindrical vessel widening in the middle, its main use seems to have been for containing and pouring liquids, (presumably unguents or oils), with the narrow neck and mouth allowing controlled pouring. Although the majority seem to be Hellenistic, some have been identified as dating to the seventh century BC, which is probably inaccurate. The name Fusifform Unguentarium can also be used for this shape. The significantly large numbers of unguentaria dating to the end of the fourth century BC would indicate this to be the main period when these dedications became popular.

3.6 Kraters and Related Shapes

3.6.1 Krater (Κρατήρ)

The modern definition of a krater is a large wide-mouthed bowl with a foot. The name, derived from kerannymi (I mix), clearly emphasises the function of these vessels as containers for the mixing of water and wine. There are four main krater types: column krater, kalyx krater, volute krater and bell krater. Of these forms the bell and kalyx kraters are found at the Kabeirion, although there are a large number of examples classified simply as 'krater'. The shape was in use from the Protogeometric period until late red figure.

1. Bell Krater: Named for its inverted bell-shaped form, although this is a modern usage. The shape is very similar to a Protogeometric form and reappears at the beginning of the fifth century. Throughout the fifth and fourth centuries BC this seems to have been the most popular type of krater. It remained an important red figure shape until the end of this decoration technique. There are two main types of bell krater:
 - A. Squat, more compact type, with lugs for handles. Possibly derived from Attic vats or tubs. The earliest pieces are footless, but in the later periods a foot is present. Some use the name lugged krater to refer to this form.

³² Kanowski, 1984: under Kraters, Lebes and Stamnoi. The dinos is based on National Archaeological Museum, Athens, Inv. No.12693 which was found at the Kabeirion (Cat. No.50, Pl.10). The Chiot chalice is based upon Cook, R., 1997: 121, fig.20.

B. The Milesian krater appeared in Attic red figure in the mid fifth century. This form had proper handles and the body curved into a stem above the foot.

2. Kalyx Krater: This krater emerges in the black figure period. Numerous suggestions have been made as to the inspiration for the shape, such as a woman's skirt or a flower. A more recent proposal describes the kalyx krater as a derivation of the Siana or Lip cup.³³ The Chiot chalice, common in the east in the sixth century, has a number of similarities although it is much smaller. While the shape shows a resemblance, earlier inspiration for the kalyx form must not be disregarded. In its later history it was a popular vase shape for red figure decoration.

The presence of a variety of krater types at the sanctuary is easily explained. The alcoholic nature of the celebrations, and the emphasis on symposia, justifies the frequent appearance of kraters in the archaeological record.

3.6.2 Lebes (Λέβης)³⁴

A deep bowl, rounded at the base so a stand would be necessary. Some have a neck and lip and could be handled or handleless. They first appear in the early sixth century BC and continue at least until the fourth. The depictions of the lebes on vases show it being used in a similar way to a krater, but it also had a number of religious functions. The lebes gamikos or nuptial lebes was traditionally associated with marriage rituals, and this form had vertical handles and a lid. Despite the marital associations it would seem more likely that the lebes found at the Kabeirion was fulfilling a similar role to that of a krater.

3.6.3 Dinos (Δῖνος)³⁵

A large round-bottomed bowl with a definite mouth. Many have stands, either separate or built-in. It appears to have been a popular vessel for fine ware from the seventh century BC until the end of the fifth. The term dinos, a modern convention, ³³ Moignard, 2006: 60.

translates as ‘something that spins’. Many dinoi have whirly-gigs upon their bases and could possibly have been connected with drinking games. Like the lebes and the kraters from the sanctuary, it can be accepted that the dinoi were probably used for the mixing and serving of wine.

3.7 Drinking Vessels

Figure 3.10: The forms of the drinking vessels.³⁶ Although not pictured the karchesion is very similar to the second, more squat type of kantharos.

All the drinking vessels from the sanctuary can be associated with the consumption of alcohol within symposiastic settings. The iconography from the site clearly shows male individuals using kantharoi to consume liquids. Curiously, despite the popularity of skyphoi in the fifth to third centuries BC, they are rarely depicted within vase paintings at the Kabeirion. Elsewhere, the stylistic choice of the vase painters is to place preference on the kantharos or the drinking horn. If we view this in terms of Dionysian iconography, the preference for the kantharos or drinking horn is a continuation of specific ideas associated with this particular deity. It would also support the view that the Kabeiric sanctuary at Thebes either amalgamated with, or adopted the iconography and ideology from a Dionysian cult. The unmistakable shapes of these two forms also lend themselves to depiction. The squat skyphos however would not have translated well into a painted scene.

3.7.1 Kantharos (Κάνθαρος)

This name in its most typical composition applies to a drinking vessel with tall lip, shallow bowl, vertical handles and stemmed foot. There are numerous variations in the shape, meaning that the foot can be either squat or tall and the handles high or rounded. There are instances of kantharoi having no handles whatsoever. Unsurprisingly for a vessel associated with drinking, it has a long tradition of being closely linked to Dionysos, as numerous vase paintings show the kantharos being used in rituals by Dionysos and Heracles. This version appears in the archaeological record during the Protogeometric and Geometric periods. Black glaze examples arise early in the shape's history in both Attica and Boeotia. In terms of decoration the plain black glaze remains the major decorative technique but later there are also red figure types. By the fourth century it is tall and slim and the handles are often spurred. This seems to be a characteristic of various vase designs including the kantharos at the Kabeirion. Heimberg has a useful table showing the chronological developments of the various kantharoi classes found at the site.³⁷ As various metal kantharoi have also been discovered, it is presumed that the ceramic versions are emulating these forms.

3.7.2 Karchesion³⁸

This type is often described as a footless kantharos. Presumably the dates of production are similar to the kantharos.

3.7.3 Kylix (Κύλιξ), or Cup³⁹

The modern convention applies to a cup that is a wide-bowled, shallow drinking vessel with horizontal handles. Production seems to have started in the Protogeometric period and continued to the third century BC, though later ³⁷ Heimberg, 1982: Pl.67.

³⁸ Kanowski, 1984: under Kantharos, see reference to John Boardman.

³⁹ Kanowski, 1984: under Kylix; Cook, R., 1997: 224-225.

examples are known. The kylix form divides into two categories: stemmed and stemless. Although the skyphos and kantharos technically belong to this group, they are usually separated in modern literature.

1. Stemmed Kylix: Versions of this style, of which there are a large number, changed in relation to the fashions of the period. The Protocorinthian cup seems to have been a predecessor of this form. A number of examples from both Athens and Corinth depict dancers, though in the final stages the decoration is simply black glaze.
2. Stemless Kylix: Most popular as black glaze ware and common in the fifth and fourth centuries BC. There are some instances of stemless kylikes being decorated in red figure during the fifth century.

3.7.4 Skyphos (Σκύφος)

The name now applies to a deep drinking cup on a low foot with horizontal or vertical handles. There are a number of cups with skyphoi characteristics throughout the history of Greek ceramics with examples being recorded from the Mycenaean, Protogeometric and Geometric periods up to the third century BC or later. Although popular, and in some instances well decorated, the shape was never as sought-after as the kylix. This is however a very common form at the Kabeirion: the so-called Kabeiric kantharoi of the Das Kabirenheiligtum bei Theben series are better labelled as skyphoi in terms of shape and frequently have spurred vertical ring handles.⁴⁰ A large number of the skyphoi from the Kabeirion are oversized for drinking purposes, measuring around 30cm in height. It is possible that these were used as dedications or had a similar function to kraters. Examples of skyphos-kraters are known from the Athenian agora but these tend to have fittings for lids,⁴¹ an aspect which is absent on the oversized Kabeiric skyphoi.

⁴⁰ Wolters and Bruns, 1940: Das Kabirenheiligtum bei Theben I; Braun and Haevernick, 1981: Bemalte Keramik und Glas aus dem Kabirenheiligtum bei Theben.

⁴¹ Moore and Philippides, 1986: 22-23.

3.7.5 Kothon (Κώθον)

The kothon was a version of the drinking vessel. The use of the term kothon is a modern convention. The key characteristics are a convex profile, low ring foot, various types of handles, and the vessel can be lidded or lidless. The shape seems to have been common in Corinthian work.

3.7.6 Beaker

A drinking cup with a single vertical handle.⁴²

3.8 Pyxis (Πυξίς)

This form is closely identified with the exaleiptron (unguent flask or container). The name is usually applied to the small box-like containers with lids. The majority are normally round and the profiles can vary greatly. Beazley classified the post-Protogeometric pyxis into four types,⁴⁴ but these are different to the classifications of other scholars and exclude Corinthian ware.

Protogeometric:

1. A common globular pyxis on a low foot, the top of the vessel turns into a small lip with a low conical lid and no handles.
2. Same as 1, but wider at the top and with two vertical handles.

⁴⁴ Beazley, 1963: Type A, 890 No.173, Type B, C, D, 1328.

Geometric:

1. Globular, a descendant of Protogeometric 1, with a lip.
2. Ovoid, broad at the top and narrowing to a blunt point at the bottom.
3. A later version which is flat.

Post-Geometric:

Type A Sixth to fifth century BC. Concave sides, similar to a cotton reel, foot can be a ring or three-four individual feet.

Type B Form was popular for approximately a century, from the second quarter of the fifth to the second quarter of the fourth century BC. A flat cylindrical vessel with vertical sides and rim at bottom. Lid slips over the vessel covering it and rests on the bottom rim. Pyxis resembles a powder box and the form is often called the powder box pyxis. This type seems to be unrelated to Type A.

Type C From the mid fifth to mid fourth century BC. A later form of Type A, with concave sides, but is much lower than A. The form sits on a ring foot and the lid rests on a rim.

Type D Late fifth to fourth century BC. A small cylindrical vessel with straight sides, the lid is flat and disc-like. Similar to Type B.

Evidence from the vessels and other vase paintings suggest that the pyxis was an item primarily used by women. Some excavated pyxides contained cosmetics,⁴⁵ and there are scenes showing them utilised as trinket or jewellery containers.⁴⁶ It has been implied that they also held medicines and incense.⁴⁷ These illustrations often show weddings or funerals implying that they may also have played a role in these rituals.

The discovery of pyxides at the Kabeirion would clearly support the theory that women were present and active at the sanctuary. The question as to why pyxides were dedicated remains unclear. Their use could be interpreted as confirmation of the existence of a strong female deity at the sanctuary, and that these dedications are not meant for the male Kabeiroi but rather for the female Mother Goddess typically associated with these sites. If this is the case it could be the first votive evidence that supports her existence. We know from a lekane buried within one of the structures at the site that there were libations being made to ‘the husband’,⁴⁸ so we are aware that there must have been a female consort. On the basis of this data the votive offerings could be separated, to some extent, into gendered categories.

⁴⁶ For an example of a pyxis as a jewellery container, see the grave relief of Hegeso in the Kerameikos, Athens (Knigge, 1988: 132-133, fig. 128).

3.9 Bowls, Plates, Dishes and Related Shapes

We understand that there was a component to the celebrations involving feasting and drinking.⁵⁰ Therefore, the majority of these artefacts are not dedicatory pieces but rather objects with a functional role within the sanctuary. These types were used throughout antiquity, although their popularity increased in the late fifth century BC.

3.9.1 Bowl

There are a number of bowls at the Kabeirion. These objects which are hemispherical can be handled or handleless and with or excluding a foot. They are usually 12-15cm in diameter, although smaller examples are known. They appear to have been used as drinking cups and have a form akin to a handleless skyphos.

⁴⁸ Schachter, 2003: 122.

⁴⁹ Kanowski, 1984: under Miscellaneous Shapes and Lekane, Lekanis.

⁵⁰ Cooper and Morris, 1990: 66.

3.9.2 Lekanis (Λεκάνις) and Lekane (Λεκάνη)

The information regarding these two shapes is not sufficient to clarify the differences between them completely. What is clear is that the vessel was a basin or bowl, varying from deep versions to shallow ones, and produced as fine, plain and coarse ware items. The use of these terms varies and few scholars are consistent in their attributions. The best summary is that both lekane and lekanis are general multi-purpose bowls and can be either lidded or unlidded. The lekanis is often connected with marriage; illustrations of weddings often show a lekanis as a bridal gift. It seems to have been associated with women as a toilet article, and also a household item along the same lines as the pyxis.

3.9.3 Plate

These are relatively common; they are simply a flat or reasonably flat disc with a rim and quite frequently a ring foot. The size of the plates is linked to the period of manufacture. The earlier examples are on a much larger scale than the later ones.

3.9.4 Dish

Very similar to a plate but with more of a curve to the outline of the form.

3.9.5 Fish Plate

A specialised type of plate with a small indentation at the centre. The plate floor slopes towards this depression, possibly to allow the juices from the fish to mingle with the fish sauce accompaniment.⁵¹ This plate is named after the painted marine designs which are characteristic of this object, yet the examples from the sanctuary are all black glaze rather than having detailed decoration.

3.9.6 Salt Cellar

The salt cellar is simply a small round bowl which is believed to be for the holding of salt, (there is no known archaeological or scientific evidence for the identification of these bowls with salt).⁵² Normally decorated with black glaze. Heimberg has diagrams of 32 examples showing the large variety of forms the black glaze salt cellars can take.⁵³

3.10 Plastic Vases

Plastic vases consist of a large range of vessels formed into the shape of a human figure or head, animal or another object. Their purpose at the sanctuary remains unclear. They may have been functional items used within rituals, or they may have been dedicatory pieces. We know that bulls had a special role at the site, and the appearance of bull-shaped vessels may have been connected to this practice. Biers refers to the plastic vase at Corinth becoming a popular phenomenon in the seventh and sixth centuries BC, although there are much earlier examples.⁵⁴

⁵² As a result of this uncertainty, all salt cellars are catalogued with pyxides.

3.10.1 Almond-Shaped Vessel

The body of this vessel is shaped like an almond giving the object its distinctive name. The neck, mouth and handles are in the same manner as the amphoriskos.

3.10.2 Head Vessel

A human head attached to an otherwise regular Greek vase shape. These are usually known as figure vases or head vases. The examples from the Kabeirion are of a satyr's head.

3.10.3 Double Head Vessel

A janiform version of the head vessel. Those from the Kabeirion consist of a woman's head paired with that of a satyr. Another double-headed type attributed to the Kabeirion is an example held by the National Archaeological Museum in Athens. This is a kantharos on which a woman's head has been paired with that of an Ethiopian.⁵⁶

3.10.4 Animal (Animal Head or Animal Vessel)

Can either be an animal head in the same manner as the head vessel, or a complete animal with space inside to contain liquid.

3.10.5 Rhyton (ῥυτόν)

The rhyton is usually an animal head or protome attached to the base of a normal drinking vessel. The heads are made from moulds and have a handle. Since later examples do not have a foot they cannot stand except when turned upside down. Similar rhyta are found in the Near East, and it is very likely that the Greek versions are based on these. There are several from the Kabeirion, 10 in total; one is of Pegasos, and the others are of animal heads, (several rams, a donkey, a pig and a dolphin).

⁵⁶ Beardsley, 1929: 23.

3.10.6 Drinking Horn (Κέρας)

A long horn-like vessel and, like the rhyton, cannot stand on its own except when inverted. It is frequently seen in black figure vase paintings, and there are examples of drinking horns painted on some of the pieces from the Kabeirion.

3.10.7 Phallus Jug

There are two offerings of vessels created from human genitalia (male), and a possible third.⁵⁷ Although dedications of human body parts are known in the ancient world, the majority of these are not functional as in the Kabeiric examples, instead being simply representational models (Figure 3.14).⁵⁸ The Attic example uses the phallus as a foot, whereas the Kabeiric pieces appear to be jug spouts.

B. Foot from an Attic phallus cup.⁶⁰

Considering the contexts of those best classified as models, most are to be found within the centres associated with Asclepios. The Asclepieion at Corinth has a large number of these votives, the majority of which have been given to the sanctuary in thanks to the deity for the successful healing of the dedicator's ailment.⁶¹ The Kabeirion appears to have little or no connection with healing cults. The site's long-standing role as the seat of a fertility deity suggests that these votives are connected with human reproduction. If they were presented to the sanctuary before the hopeful arrival of an infant, the dedicator may have wished to draw the deity's attention to their desire for a child. If dedicated after a successful pregnancy, the offerings may have been given in thanks to the deity for a request fulfilled. If we consider the figurine in the context of the known archaeological evidence from healing centres, the individual dedicating the object would have initiated the request. In this case it would indicate a male dedicator for the Kabeiric phalloi. Similar phalloi have been found at the Asclepieion at Corinth and are normally described as votive offerings in thanks for the return of potency.⁶² There is at least one instance of a phallus being dedicated for the removal of kidney stones.⁶³

Nevertheless, the phallus is a symbol of Dionysos and carried in processions associated with his festivals.⁶⁴ The similarities between the cults of the Kabeiroi and Dionysos may go some way in explaining the presence of these figurines.

The closest parallel found which reflects the functional nature of the Kabeiric phalloi appears to be a Corinthian phallus-shaped oil flask dating to the second quarter of the sixth century BC.⁶⁵ There have been suggestions in relation to the purpose of these pieces; Warner Slane and Dickie's discussion of the 'Apotropaic Phallus' present a number of these; most notably the concept that the phallus was a good luck charm that warded away the 'Evil Eye of Envy'.⁶⁶ When considering the main themes of the Theban Kabeiric cult it would seem a more plausible assumption that the phalloi found at the site have fertility connotations.

3.11 Other Vase Forms

3.11.1 Basket Vase

This is presumably a kalathos, the name used for a vessel shaped like an inverted bell or basket. There are other types of basket vase which are mentioned by the ancient authors, i.e. kibōtos (κιβωτός), kistē (κίστη) and phormos. The term was certainly used in conjunction with wicker baskets in antiquity. Production of kalathoi is known from the Protogeometric period (or earlier) onwards.⁶⁸ Its presence at the Kabeirion is probably due to a dedication but whether the offering was the vessel itself or its contents is unclear. We know that baskets played a role in ritual by carrying dedicatory goods to a sanctuary and that they could be made from materials other than wicker.⁶⁹

3.11.2 Ring Vessel

This type bears some similarities with the kernos, ‘an earthenware vessel, holding within it a large number of small cups cemented together’.⁷⁰ The examples from the Kabeirion consist of a large ring with small vases attached and do appear to be similar. Ring vessel Cat. No.563 (Pl.72b) has an oinochoe, skyphos and a one-handled cup attached. The function of this type of container is not clear. The kernos mainly seems to have been used as a votive at religious sanctuaries, and the name and its affiliated terms all belong within this setting.⁷¹ There is evidence that it may have been involved in rites for initiation into the Eleusinian mysteries and possibly those of Cybele and Rhea. If this is the case then the appearance of these at the Kabeirion, another mystery cult, may not be unusual.

3.12 Toys and Votives

3.12.1 Bell

There are a number of these from the Kabeirion. They are small simple objects consisting of a bell with a clay clapper. The decoration of these objects normally consists of simple patterns in added black. They seem to be a form of votive but may have links with the Orphic myths regarding Dionysos.

3.12.2 Spinning Top

The spinning tops of the Kabeirion consist of a cylindrical form narrowing to a cone at one end. Decoration is normally in black with a preference for simple linear designs or ivy chains. Like the bells, they appear to be a votive offering which may be linked to the Orphic Dionysos myths.

⁷¹ Liddell and Scott, 1940: under Κέρνος.

⁷² The bell is based on Cat. No.643, (Pl.77I). The spinning top is based upon National Archaeological Museum, Athens, Inv. No.10473 (Cat. No.662, Pl.78i). The bobbin is based upon National Archaeological Museum, Athens, Inv. No.10459 (Cat. No.724, Pl.86a-c). All were found at the Kabeirion.

According to the Orphic myths, the titans lured Dionysos to his death by enticing him from safety with the offer of toys. Spinning tops and bells are often included in the list of objects used by the Titans. The strong Dionysiac influence at the Kabeirion means that objects such as these with strong Orphic connections are not particularly unusual. However, care must be taken when making this connection; the second of the two Kabeiroi was Pais, literally the child, so the toy dedications may have been for his benefit.⁷³

3.12.3 Iynx, Bobbin (ἰυνξ)

An unusual object of which only 17 or 18 are known to be from Greece; 14 or 15 from Athens⁷⁴ and single examples from Aegina, Delos and the Theban Kabeirion. The actual Greek name is not known, but the term iynx has been adopted, and is described as a 'magical spinning wheel used to woo unwilling lovers'.⁷⁵ The example from the Kabeirion, although fragmentary, fits with the observations recorded for this object shape. According to Moore, it was in production for a limited period, (from the end of the Persian Wars until after the mid fifth century BC).⁷⁶ These were decorated in red figure or on white ground and reached a size of approximately 11-13cm in diameter.⁷⁷ The example from the Kabeirion is also Attic dating to 480-450 BC, and is roughly 13cm in diameter. If we accept either of the interpretations for this shape, either a bobbin or a magic spinning wheel, the nature of the object would probably be that of a votive offering from a female.

An alternative description is also provided. This item is frequently described in other texts as a yo-yo;⁷⁸ this explanation is offered by a display in the vase galleries of the National Archaeological Museum in Athens. The description is strengthened by vase paintings showing figures holding an iynx-like form from which dangles a long string. One example from Wien (Inv. No. 191) shows Hyakinthos on a swan (side A) with an object in his right hand from which dangles a long string. On side B there is a winged figure, possibly Zephyros, who appears to be reaching out for it.⁷⁹

3.13 Lamps

A small shallow container with a space for holding oil and a spout which accommodates the wick. Designs vary from simple discs of clay pinched into shape, to more complex designs with covered containment areas and stamped decoration and are produced throughout antiquity.

Lamps have been included within the ceramics because of the role light played in the ancient mystery cults. A significant number of the vases have scenes in which the figures carry torches implying that events took place at night (Figure 3.17). However, within the archaeological record there are no images of lamps like those found. There is often discussion regarding the use of light in the mysteries of Demeter and Dionysos. This is due to the similarities of initiation practices between the two cults, and it can be inferred that lamps and torches are being employed in a similar manner at the Kabeirion during the initiations there.⁸⁰

⁸¹ Wolters and Bruns, 1940: 106 M2, Pl.33.3, 53.5; Braun and Haevernick, 1981: 62 No.292.

It is also worth noting the relationship of lamps and torches to gender. In domestic scenes, women invariably are connected with lamps, whereas men can be seen with torches; perhaps, as Parisinou describes, the torch ‘represents the brighter, outside world of man’.⁸² However, in ritual contexts, where women are removed from the domestic sphere, the torch can be carried by women of all ages and status as evidence of their civic role with religion.⁸³

3.14 Lids

As is clear from the preceding entries, a large number of ceramic shapes had their own lids, but not all vase shapes had lids. Those catalogued simply as ‘lid’ refer to those pieces of which only this part remains.

3.15 Cooking Wares

The cooking wares from the sanctuary can be used to confirm the existence of feasting at the site in terms of food preparation. On the basis of this evidence it would seem that the consumption of food is a feature of the activities throughout the sanctuary’s lifespan. Nevertheless, more detailed analysis of the datable evidence highlights the possibility that food consumption and preparation was not a consistent feature at the complex.

The concept of exocuisine and endocuisine can be applied to ritual consumption of meat and other foodstuffs, yet the two terms represent very different methods.

⁸⁴ The cooking ware forms are all based on finds from the Kabeirion, see plates from Heimberg, 1982.

Exocuisine, 'outside cooking', refers to the preparation of food via a public display such as roasting over a fire.⁸⁵ Endocuisine, 'inside cooking' applies to food processing within a familial setting and within an enclosed pot.⁸⁶ As Figure 3.19 demonstrates, the associated interpretations of the two techniques are very different.

At the Kabeirion, endocuisine appears to have been practiced to some extent. Normal food consumption at a religious sanctuary would involve the cooking of sacrificial meat on an open flame and the cooking wares from the Kabeirion all comprise endocuisine types. We are aware of some roasting activities at the site but the evidence for these relates to hearths within enclosed tholos structures. It could be argued that the tholos has the same symbolic endocuisine effect as a cooking pot, in that the food is separated from the public gaze and restricted to a smaller group to whom access had been allowed (Figure 3.20, p.127).

3.15.1 Chytra

Chytrai are identified as round-bottomed, lidless, handled cooking pots, a staple of the Classical Greek kitchen.⁸⁸ This form appears to have been used as an all-purpose cooking pot, and presumably utilised in conjunction with a stand due to its rounded base.⁸⁹

3.15.2 Cooking Pot

These six examples of cooking ware are probably best catalogued as alternative forms of lopadia. The cooking pots are shallow, casserole type dishes with handles and slightly curved bases. Like the chytrai they may have been used in conjunction with a stand.⁹⁰ A number of examples have a spout-like feature; some are solid whereas others are pierced. It has been proposed that the pierced versions are escape routes for steam during the cooking process.⁹¹

3.15.3 Lopadia

The lopadia was a shallow rounded dish with offset lip, (possibly to receive a lid), and handles.⁹² Many of the examples from the Kabeirion are handleless indicating that there may have been some confusion between the classification of lopadia and cooking pots – many of the cooking pots should be classified as lopadia and vice versa.

3.15.4 Mortarium

The mortarium is identified as a kitchen utensil for the mixing and mashing of food.⁹³ The name mortarium is the Latin version, in Greek it is θυεία or ἰγδίζ.⁹⁴ These dishes are heavily built shallow bowls often with handles, spout and a gritted interior surface.⁹⁵ Roman mortaria have often been dated by their distinctive rims: the 'roll and bead', the 'hammer-head' and the 'vertical'.⁹⁶

3.16 Storage

3.16.1 Pithos

Pithoi were large vessels used for transportation and storage in ancient Greece and contained a vast number of products including wine, oil, grain and flour.⁹⁷ They are large clay pots, normally of a coarse ware type, although decorated relief ware pithoi are known, as well as wooden equivalents and other examples carved from stone.⁹⁸

3.17 Unknown Objects: Fragments

The pieces classified as fragments of unknown objects are just as valuable and should not be disregarded. A large number have interesting iconographic decoration or can be dated with reasonable certainty. Admittedly information has been lost due to the fact that we no longer recognise the function for which these pieces were intended within the sanctuary.

3.18 Vase Usage Evident in the Iconography

3.18.1 Vase Scenes which have Representations of Vessels

From this graph (Figure 3.21, p.130) it is clear that the majority of scenes which have vases represented within them relate to those of a celebratory nature which would involve ritual feasting and drinking. Therefore, it is not unexpected that symposia or banqueting images picture vases. Representations of dancing also rated highly but this could be construed as a derivative of the Dionysiac influences at the site. A significant number of these dance scenes involve maenads and satyrs. Interestingly the other types of vase images which have a higher number of vessels shown within their depictions are those relating to the preliminary events before initiation. This could be an indicator that these events, or indeed the initiation, relied to some extent on the consumption of alcohol. This hypothesis is supported by the mythology regarding Jason and the Golden Fleece. During the voyage, Jason and the Argonauts stopped at Samothrace or Lemnos en route to the Fleece, and there they were initiated into the mysteries.⁹⁹ These ideas concerning alcohol and initiation could have been preserved by Aeschylus' play Kabeiroi which takes place on the island of Lemnos, and his unusual representation of the intoxicated Argonauts.¹⁰⁰

3.18.2 Types of Vases represented in Vase Scenes

The types of vases used in the rituals and activities depicted on the material from the Kabeirion show a major tendency towards the illustration of those items connected with ritual drinking (Figure 3.22, p.131). The most frequent form represented is the kantharos and during the fifth century, when the ceramic corpus dramatically increases, it is the kantharos that has the highest total. The use of kantharoi therefore within the vase scenes means that for this vessel at least, art does imitate life in terms of the numbers involved. Curiously the skyphos does not receive the same treatment. In view of the enormous quantity of skyphoi on the site, it would be expected that illustrations of sanctuary activity would involve the inclusion of these items. Apart from those associated with drinking and feasting, the only other vessel attested in the iconographic record is the aryballos, but this again is not unanticipated considering the possibility of sporting events being held at the sanctuary.

3.18.3 Vessels by Type of Vase Scene

Symposium scenes

The symposium and banqueting scenes provide the greater number of depictions of vessels within vase illustrations, and it is perhaps not unusual that the majority of the material portrayed is related to the function of drinking and merriment. There is one example of an aryballos in these images, but the vase in question (Cat. No.98, Pl.25a-c), shows the deity Kabeiros reclining, drinking horn in hand with a procession of suppliants, one carrying an aryballos, approaching him. A large quantity of vases show Kabeiros reclining and drinking, again an adoption of Dionysiac iconography, with the vase scenes reflecting the actual ceramic material from the excavations.

Dancing scenes

Like those examples shown in symposium scenes, the depictions of dancing follow a corresponding theme. With the exception of a single aryballos all the others relate to ritual drinking. Many of the figures appear to be satyrs and maenads and are perhaps copying the Dionysiac influences which the cult received.

Scenes of drama and myth

The few vases shown within this context tend to refer to the portrayal of Circe and Odysseus.¹⁰¹ Circe is usually shown carrying the vessel containing the potion. The representation of this particular scene from the Odyssey may relate to the initiation practices of the Theban cult. Drinking a potion, albeit a possibly more alcoholic one, would bring the initiate into a different state, very much like the situation in which Odysseus' men found themselves.¹⁰² It seems exceedingly unlikely that the drinks provided at the sanctuary would turn the new participants into animals, but it might have been an attempt to get them to look at the world through new eyes.¹⁰³

Scenes of preliminary events before initiation

The importance of alcoholic celebration is again mirrored in the vessels shown in the scenes prior to initiation. It must be stated that the number of vases represented is very small, only 10 in total, but they clearly demonstrate a selection of the ceramics required for the preparatory stages of joining the cult.

Hunting scenes

There are only two vases shown in hunting scenes, a basin and a kantharos. When considering the nature of hunting it is not unexpected that this particular vase scene type does not contain more illustrations.

Sporting scenes

The vessels represented in sporting scenes are without doubt the prizes for the victor of the competition. An amphora, a skyphos and an unidentified object that may be a basin are depicted as prizes on a boxing scene. The inclusion of an amphora may be reflecting the prizes awarded at the Panathenaic Games at Athens, of which numerous fragments have been found within the Kabeirion (see 3.2.2).¹⁰⁴

¹⁰¹ For similar scenes see Cancini, 1992: 52-55.

Unknown scenes

Very little can be said regarding those portrayed in scenes that cannot be identified. The objects illustrated include a basin, three oinochoai, two skyphoi and another unidentified shape. What can be observed is that once again the objects reflect the ritual drinking and feasting aspects of the site.

3.19 Summary

When considering the ceramics of the sanctuary from a general perspective it is instantly clear that the focus of the vast majority of the material is firmly placed upon those artefacts which have close connections with ritual feasting and drinking. The presence of objects associated with cult ritual, such as the bells, spinning tops and human genitalia, provide an indication of the deities present at the site. What we see here is a strong Dionysian influence on the material, not only in his role as god of the vine, but also in his Orphic incarnation. The existence of material more closely connected with a deity resembling Asclepios is curious, but there are examples of Kabeiric sites with strong healing tendencies elsewhere in the Mediterranean. The existence of a red figure vase (Cat. No.693) only confuses the matter further. According to Lang, the figures of Asclepios and the goddess Hygeia on this vase are associated with healing.¹⁰⁵ This vase, now on display in the National Archaeological Museum in Athens (Inv. No. 1393), has the male figure identified as Kabeiros. Its execution by the Mystes Painter would be sufficient to secure a Kabeiric connection, but the iconography does clearly point to an Asclepios-themed scene because of the presence of the tame snake. Nonetheless, there are examples of steles with chthonic deities who are seated in a similar manner with drinking vessels and a snake.¹⁰⁶

The point made in connection to the pyxides – that there must have been a female deity at the sanctuary who warranted offerings – clearly indicates that the votives can be divided into gender categories. The pyxis, loutrophoros and the iynx are all artefacts primarily associated with the female sphere. This may lead to two conclusions; firstly, that women dedicated these regardless of their gender specifications to male deities, and secondly, that they were given because of their gender associations to a female divinity. Interestingly the Kabeiric sanctuary on Lemnos could also be described as having the same distinction. There are a large number of pyxides at Lemnos, many of them inscribed, but the Lemnian inscriptions $\iota\epsilon\rho\upsilon\nu$, $\iota\epsilon\rho\alpha$ or $\iota\epsilon\rho-$ are not specifically male or female. We also know that some objects are inscribed $\kappa\alpha\beta\epsilon\iota\rho\omicron\varsigma$ or $\kappa\alpha\beta\epsilon\iota\rho\iota\omicron\nu$, which would connect them directly with the male deities.

Chapter Four

The Pre-Sanctuary Phases to the Early Classical Period: Up to 450 BC

4.1 Introduction

The origins of the sanctuary are particularly important when it comes to understanding the key events and features of the site within the Classical period. The Kabeirion seems to have evolved through various incarnations whereby the focus of the cult and also the dedications changed. It would seem logical therefore to evaluate the usage of ceramics from a wider perspective as this would allow for the identification of anomalies in the archaeological ceramic record.

From an historical perspective (Figure 4.1, p.145) it is instantly apparent that both Thebes and Boeotia as a whole were undergoing significant events which would shape their future in the subsequent centuries. The submission of Thebes to Persia and the later defeat of Boeotia would perhaps have had some affect on the sanctuary, considering its relationship to Thebes. Nevertheless it is obvious that there appears to be very little disruption to the sanctuary despite the militaristic events of this period.

4.2 The Topography and Location of the Kabeirion

The motivations behind the location of the sanctuary of the Kabeiroi are both important and interesting. However there are problems regarding the topography of the sanctuary as it is presently published, as well as numerous difficulties with the preparation of material for publication.¹ Currently, there are two separate topographic plans of the sanctuary, one from Heyder and Mallwitz' 1978 volume

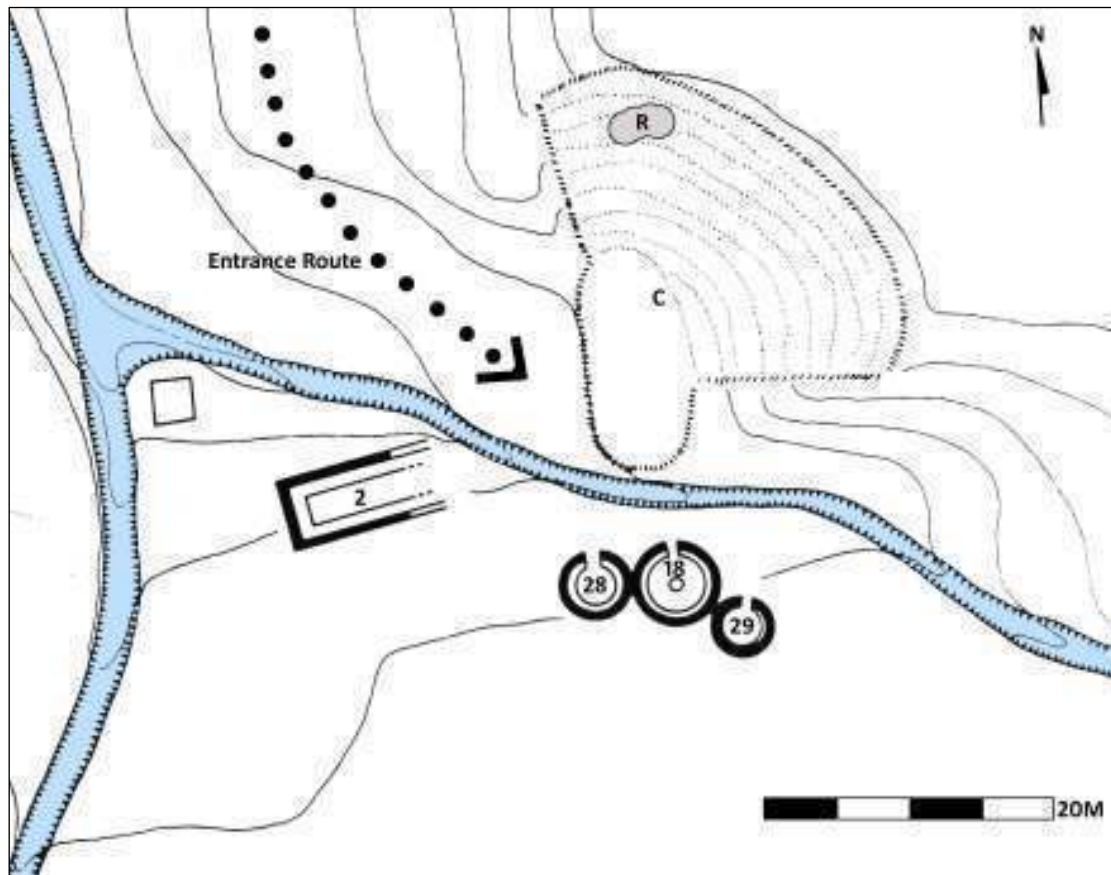

Figure 4.2: Topographic location of the sanctuary, after Cooper and Morris, 1990: 67 fig.11. Features: Rock R; Tholoi 18, 28, 29; Rectangular Building 2; Cavea C; Stream is blue.

Although the rock outcrop is the more obvious attraction (Figure 4.4, p.149), the landscape itself may have played a significant role in the choice of location. The sanctuary is situated within a natural basin in an area of low hills.³ This has the effect of 'enclosing' it, making access difficult except by one low-lying approach to the west/north-west (Figure 4.2), an aspect shielding it from general view and consequently emphasising the secrecy of the cult. Figure 4.3a-b (p.147) clearly shows that the sanctuary is indeed separated from the Theban plain and more importantly the wider landscape.

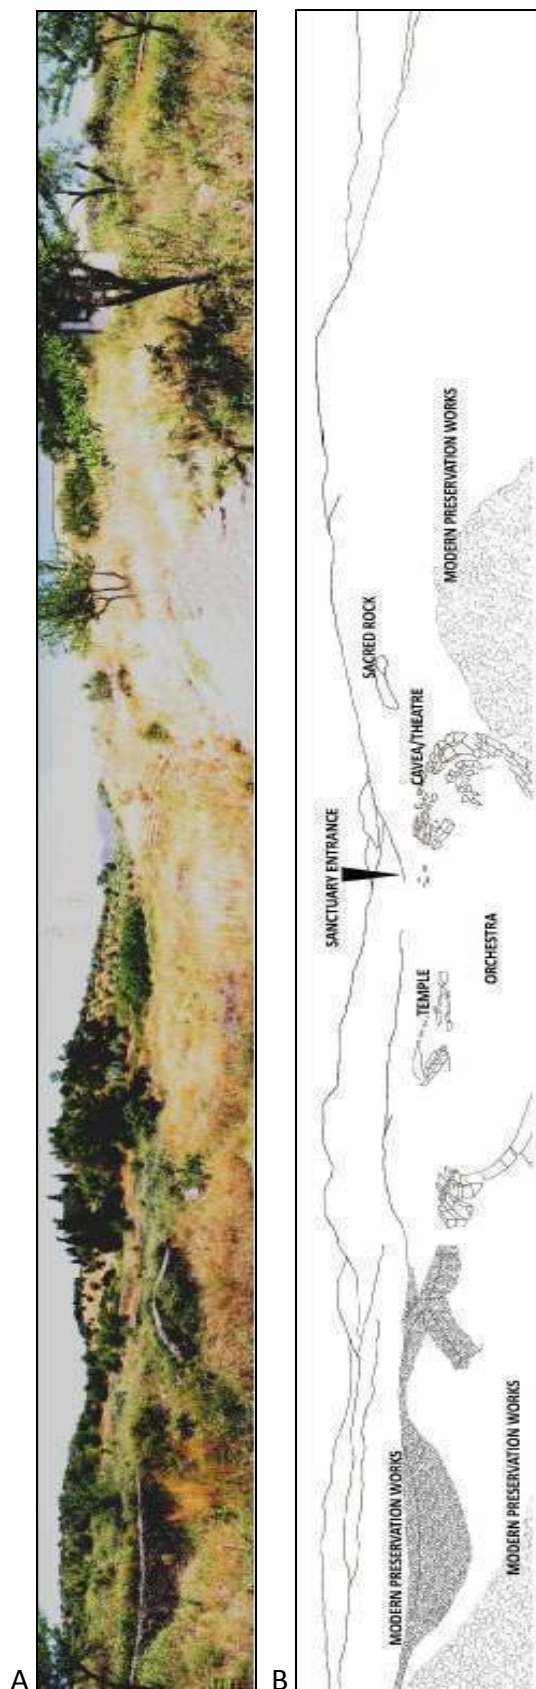

Figure 4.3a-b: 360 degree panorama (photograph and simplified diagram) of the sanctuary, taken from the modern site entrance and centred on the north-west.⁴

⁴ Photograph and diagram, both K. Bedigan.

The rock formation is probably the main reason the site was selected as the mystery cults at both Eleusis and Samothrace have similar features.⁵ The Mirthless Rock at Eleusis is, according to the myths, where Demeter sat and mourned the loss of her daughter, Persephone. The following translation has no references to the rock itself, and as we know that the Maiden Well is the first place that Demeter sat once she reached Eleusis it is presumed that this is where the rock is situated.

Sad at heart, she sank down by the side of the road at the Maiden Well, where the citizens came to draw water. She sat in the shade, with the branches of an olive tree growing overhead.⁶

Samothrace has numerous rock altars.⁷ Schachter hypothesises that rock formations were thought to be a direct connection with the gods that resided underground,⁸ an interesting proposal when one considers that the Kabeiric deities are linked with Meter and at several other sites with pre-Hellenic deities of the underworld.⁹ A fragment by Mnaseas provides the information with whom the pre-Hellenic Samothracian gods were equated in the Greek Pantheon; Axieros is Demeter, Axiokersa and Axiokersos are Persephone and Hades, and Casmilos/Cadmilos is Hermes.¹⁰

Curiously, there are very few references or explanations as to why some rocks were deemed to be sacred. Many volumes on the Greek landscape refer to natural features as being sacred, but rocks (sacred or otherwise) are only very rarely mentioned and then only in passing.¹¹ Bradley does make reference to the development of monuments or sanctuaries around a natural place.¹² Taking into account the subsequent architectural development of the Kabeiric site at Thebes, it would seem logical that the sanctuary was chosen primarily for its outlook. It was only later in its lifespan that the structural elements became more important when the orientation of the sanctuary moved away from the sacred rock and instead focused on the structures within the orchestra area (Figure 7.2a-b, p.300).

Figure 4.4: Sacred rock at the Theban Kabeirion. This is the natural feature upon which the cult was originally focused. This type of element is frequently present at many ancient sanctuaries, including the sanctuary of the Great Gods on Samothrace which has many rock altars.

4.3 The Site in the Neolithic

There is little or no evidence to suggest an earlier use of the sanctuary site. In the reports from the excavations in the 1950-60s there are references to a few pieces of Neolithic pottery being found during the course of the project.¹³ There is no other proof, at least none that is mentioned in the reports, to indicate the use of the site before it became a location for the Kabeiric cult.

¹³ Bruns, 1964: 232, 239. These fragments are not included in the ceramic catalogue.

It can be debated that the sanctuary may have had its origins in the Geometric period but ceramic evidence is scarce with only a few examples known (Table 4.2, p.152). Other artefacts, namely the metal dedications (i.e. bronze and lead bulls) dating from the tenth century,¹⁴ imply that the site was used much earlier than the sixth century BC. If we consider these in conjunction with the few pieces of ceramic, it is clear that during this early phase the site was not a sanctuary but rather a location that had some sacred significance. The prominent rock formation may have been the hub of this activity (Figure 4.4, p.149). Unfortunately, the stylistic analysis on which the dating of the metal artefacts is based has been described as unreliable.¹⁵ Mallwitz and Heyder record Period I as 1000-500 BC based upon this dating evidence.¹⁶ According to Langdon, there is no reason to assign any of the votive bronze or lead animal figurines before the late eighth century BC, and would further suggest that the majority of the figurines are Archaic rather than Geometric.¹⁷

Architectural features of this site are extremely limited; only one man-made structure is recorded, M124, a wall which is roughly aligned with the rock formation to the north side of the site.

4.4.2 Find Contexts

Regrettably for the first phase in the sanctuary's existence only one vase actually has a proper find context. There are several pieces known to have come from the site, but these are lacking in more specific find information. The single fragment found was however located within the vicinity of the later middle round building (see Figure 4.9, 18, p.161).

4.4.3 Ceramic Usage

The majority of the vessels dating from the Geometric period through to the sixth century BC consist almost entirely of pieces closely associated with the serving and consumption of liquids. The two pieces which are connected to wine preparation suggest dedications taking place during this period.

In Period I there is a significant increase in the ceramics found at the site. The largest group of material comprises drinking paraphernalia, and there is little evidence to indicate the use of vases as dedicatory objects.

4.4.4 Non-Kabeiric Vase Painters

The presence of vases by both non-Kabeiric and non-Boeotian vase painters confirms that there was interaction between Attica and Boeotia. This could be used to highlight one of two possibilities, that imported ceramics were being used at the sanctuary, or that there were Attic participants at the site who brought vases from their local areas.

Attic Black Figure

The Komast Group

(First half of the sixth century BC)

Other vases: ABV 23-37, 680-681; Addenda 7-9; Para 14-17.

Four nude males dancing, all looking left, facing right a nude male playing a double flute. All the figures, apart from the flute players appear to have shaggy or furry forms. Handles, base of body, stem and foot are black.	-

The Komast Group was originally compiled by Payne,¹⁸ and has been expanded by subsequent scholars. The group appears in the early sixth century as a development of the work of the Gorgon Painter.¹⁹ The komast, the dancing figure, which gives this group its name, originated in Corinth,²⁰ and over time its inspiration and iconography spread to other areas including Athens and Boeotia. Indeed the group is recognised as having a strong influence on the work of Boeotian artists of the sixth century.²¹ Beazley's studies on the Komast Group identified a number of individual hands (Table 4.5, p.155).

From these categories there is at least one kantharos listed in Beazley that has a similar scene to the kantharos described as being ‘influenced by the Komast Group’ from the Kabeirion.

Imitation of the KX Painter: Kantharos, Athens, British School, Komos (A. four men dancing, and one of them fluting, B. three men dancing).²⁴

The vase from the Kabeirion is decorated in the same manner on each side, four men dancing, accompanied by a flute player. Waiblinger contends that this example reflects the influence of the Komast vases from the sixth century.²⁵

The inclusion of the Leagros Group is problematic. As seen in Table 3.1 (p.96), there are two different dating systems to consider for this fragment of Panathenaic amphora. According to Bentz, this particular piece has not been assigned to a specific painter as yet, but on the basis of its style Wolters and Bruns attributed it to the Leagros Group.²⁶ Because of the discrepancies in the dating of the piece there are various possibilities to consider. Firstly, the fragment may be a product of the Leagros Group; or secondly, the piece is an example by another workshop or artist influenced by the group; or thirdly, that it is an imitation.

Following the introduction of red figure in Athens, the black figure style continued to develop. Towards the end of the sixth century the black figure appears to have its champions,²⁷ and R. Cook names the Andocides Painter, Psiax and the Antimenes Painter amongst those who continued to improve their compositions.²⁸ This final flowering of black figure also saw the rise of the Leagros Group whose work perhaps represents the end of its popularity.²⁹ The group is exceedingly large with different vase painters and groups specialising in a variety of vase shapes.

Of those groups and painters identified – D.II the Group of Würzburg 210, D.III the Acheloös Painter and some other unidentified artists within the Leagros Group are all said to have decorated Panathenaic amphorae.

Cat. No.593 (Pl.73g-h) comprises two fragments from a Panathenaic amphora dating to 450-400 BC; the first has an image of Athena in the aegis, presumably in a battle scene, the second is a fragment of her aegis only and is similar to the section attributed to the Dinos Painter. This scene (or similar) is featured on every vase from this festival.

Boeotian Black Figure

Atalanta Painter

c.560-550 BC

The Atalanta Painter's name derives from a vase found at the Kabeirion. There are only three vases attributed to this painter by Kilinski, and this is based on the artist's characteristic depiction of knee-caps.³¹ Neither of the other two vases has images of Atalanta. There are very few representations of boar hunting in the ceramic corpus, so there appears to be no iconographic tradition for this vessel being present at the sanctuary.

The mug-shaped oinochoe (oinochoe shape type 8) attributed to this artist is from the Kabeirion and has two nude young men with skyphoi in their right hands. Their pose implies that they are dancing or running due to the presence of skyphoi. It would be prudent to point out that this is a scene more in keeping with the realm of Dionysos than athletics. The Painter of Berlin 2268 decorated a number of type 8 oinochoai. His komos group, when decoration descriptions are provided, usually consist of pairs of youths carrying objects.³²

Youths with skyphoi are relatively unusual, the normal type of object held by his characters are wineskins and cloaks (see Figure 4.8a-b, p.161). Nevertheless, the frequent appearance of wineskins on these vessels would convey a certain familiarity with Dionysiac themes. Beazley classifies the Painter of Berlin 2268 as an early red figure cup painter; indeed the majority of his works are executed on the mug-like type 8 oinochoai and cups.³⁴

This phase at the site is marked by the appearance of datable structures and monuments. It also sees a notable decline in the dedication of bronze votive bulls (although numbers do increase in the fourth century), and there is evidence relating to the re-use of these bronze offerings (Figure 4.10). Roesch speaks of at least three bronze bulls as examples of this recycling of earlier gifts (Table 4.11, p.163).³⁶ Two bulls from around 625 BC have inscriptions which date to the late sixth or early fifth century BC, and another bull dated to c.650 BC has an inscription which places it at 500-450 BC.³⁷ The significant difference in date of production, style and date of inscription clearly indicates re-use.

The re-use of votive bulls to act as vessels for later inscriptions is not limited to this period alone, Schachter hypothesises that the metal figurines were rediscovered during later building works at the site and rededicated with new inscriptions.³⁸

On the body (left side) is the inscription: HIEPOKABEIPO /EXEMBOTOS/ANEΘEKEN. Due to damage and wear sustained by the figurine there are no doubts regarding its authenticity.

The structures all follow a similar plan with the circular buildings aligned on an east-west axis facing the rock formation to the north of the site. In addition two sacrificial pits P have been located in the western area of the sanctuary, and are dated to the beginning of the fifth century BC on the basis of a black glaze kantharos discovered within one. Similar ceramic finds provide construction dates for the circular structures dating to this period. The lower tholos 12 also dates to the beginning of the fifth century; sunk into the floor was a large ceramic lekane or tub,⁴⁰ inscribed along the rim with the words TO⊕AMAKO, to thamako, which can be literally translated as ‘property of the husband’.⁴¹ The presence of this inscription can also be used as an indication that there was a female deity also at the sanctuary, the wife, who is interpreted as being the goddess ‘Meter’ or the Mother.⁴² According to Jeffrey, there were three ‘theta’ forms: 1. ⊗, 2. ⊕, 3. ⊙. Theta forms 1. ⊗ and 2. ⊕ were both utilised until approximately 470 BC when they were replaced by theta form 3. ⊙.⁴³ The application of cruciform theta 2. ⊕ is only attested in Boeotian inscriptions until the second quarter of the fifth century BC.⁴⁴ The dating of this lekane, and therefore the dating of the structure, has been based upon the letterforms of the inscription.

The remains of three other circular buildings have been uncovered, 28, 29 and M125, but their dating is unclear. From the information available, their original construction could have taken place between the early fifth to early fourth century BC but by the middle of the third century BC, it is apparent that these structures were no longer in operation.⁴⁵

4.5.2 Find Contexts

Like Period I, the find contexts from Period II are not particularly illuminating when it comes to identifying activity at the sanctuary. One kantharos (Cat. No.983) found within a sacrificial pit (Figure 4.9, P, p.161) was said to contain various vessels and sherds dating to the fifth century BC.⁴⁶ This deposit of material presumably in dedication to the deities is interesting, not least because it is the earliest known of its kind at the site. Another kantharos was located at the north of the site (near wall M80) in the vicinity of a small room (Figure 7.10, 9, p.315). It is therefore not possible, owing to the scarcity of proper find contexts, to draw any definitive conclusions.

4.5.3 Ceramic Usage

This is the first century in which ceramic deposits emerge in larger amounts, and again the focus is on those objects associated with ritual drinking. Kantharoi greatly outnumber the other items, with symposium paraphernalia such as kraters, oinochoai and various other forms of drinking vessels all regularly appearing. Fragments of Panathenaic amphorae also begin to stand out in greater quantities and are indicative of the fact that ceramics were increasing in popularity. Cooking wares also become visible for the first time in the archaeological record.

4.6 The First Appearances of Kabeiric Ware: The Proto-Kabeiric Ware Phase

The first examples displaying distinct Kabeiric Ware tendencies appear in the sixth century BC.⁴⁷ There are, based upon the current estimation, four examples dating to the sixth century, and one from the early fifth century BC.

Two of the sixth century examples have stylistic indications reproducing the specific themes of Kabeiric Ware. Contemporary with the Komast Group there is one skyphos (Cat. No.67, Pl.17a-d) dating to the second half of the sixth century bearing similar iconographic traditions which reflect the influence of this group.⁴⁸ On the basis of the resemblances it could be suggested that this vase belongs in Beazley's 'Komast Group, Type III, Boeotian Imitators'. The second object, a lekanis lid (Cat. No.554, Pl.69a-b), has running or dancing nude males accompanied by various artistic motifs. While the scene is fairly unremarkable, it is the depiction of the nude males that emphasises its connection to the Kabeirion. The four males decorating the lid all have the caricatured facial features of Kabeiric Ware at its peak. These traits reflect Braun and Haevernick's observations regarding the portrayal of masks on vases.⁴⁹ Three of the males resemble characters on later Kabeiric Ware vases. The fourth, on the basis of facial structure and his beard, has some likeness with the satyrs of later vases, but this figure lacks any of the other characteristics of a satyr. Based upon this evidence it can be contended that the early ceramics of the sanctuary are already exhibiting the peculiarities which typify the later pieces.

⁴⁸ Beazley, 1956: 23-37.

The fifth century kantharos fragment (Cat. No.55, Pl.12b) preserves the lower extremities of a number of standing figures shown in pairs or clusters talking, and this image could resemble the conversational scenes found on later vases. It is interesting to note that a similar representation has appeared on a skyphos from the Kabeirion in Lemnos dating from the Hellenistic period.⁵² The importance of scenes picturing people talking should not be underestimated as these are usually interpreted as part of the Panegyris, the activities held at the sanctuary following initiation. As this particular depiction appears early on in the sanctuary's ceramic record, it would seem that a social element was of importance within the cult.

4.7 Summary

From these early phases in the site's development it is clear that the sanctuary evolved in terms of architecture and dedications. Although there is little evidence for Period I, the advancements in Period II can be seen in the appearance of increased numbers of ceramics as well as the dedicatory offerings of bronze and lead bulls. The pottery found at the sanctuary is informative in itself, despite the lack of proper find contexts, for it provides valuable data on the activities of the cult. There is a definite focus on those items associated with food and drink, with more emphasis on the latter but in terms of votive offerings, ceramics are not particularly popular. As identified in Figure 4.10 (p.162), the dedication of animal figurines throughout the sixth century BC remained high.

The arrival of pottery with some Kabeiric features (see section 4.6) indicates a move towards the development of Kabeiric Ware as an independent pottery style. Therefore the role of the skyphos as the primary vehicle for Kabeiric Ware decoration must surely have established itself in Periods I and II.

Chapter Five

The Classical – Early Hellenistic Period: 450-275 BC

5.1 Introduction

It is in the latter half of the fifth century BC that we see the first appearance of the characteristic pottery of the Kabeirion. There are known pieces of pottery with the caricatured features of Kabeiric Ware during the Archaic/early Classical period, but these examples can only be described as prototypes. The Classical period is when Kabeiric Ware really develops and grows in popularity. The presence of clearly recognisable Kabeiric Ware in the Thespian Polyandrion dated to c.380 BC indicates that production had commenced prior to this date, probably within the latter half of the fifth century BC.¹ In terms of development, there is a significant increase in the architectural elements of the sanctuary during this period. Period III (450-335 BC) has therefore been subdivided into two sections, IIIa (450-380 BC) and IIIb (380-335 BC). Nevertheless, there are structures which belong to both periods or which undergo secondary building phases. This is naturally unfortunate; the revised chronology is based not only upon the ceramics from the site but also the political circumstances directly relating to the city of Thebes.

The Classical-early Hellenistic period wares clearly demonstrate how Thebes influenced the Kabeiric sanctuary. The losses from war and the destruction of the city are marked by changes in activity at the site. After the devastation inflicted by Alexander the Great in 335 BC, material evidence at the site dramatically decreases, only escalating quantitatively once the city is restored.² Figure 5.1 (p.172) shows an

5.2 Period IIIa: 450-380 BC

The first phase of Period III sees a few changes to the architectural elements of the site. The lower tholos 12 is reconstructed in the third or fourth quarter of the fifth century BC after the complex is purified or perhaps damaged by fire – this is evident by the layer of ash present in the stratigraphy.³ The Period II lekane inscribed to ‘the husband’ was buried beneath the floor, possibly as part of the re-consecration of the structure.⁴ A rectangular building 2 was also erected on the site and foundation deposits, which include a black glaze karchesion and a black glaze cup,⁵ date the building to the last third of the fifth century BC.⁶

The end of Illa coincides with the occupation of Thebes by a Spartan garrison. The exact details of this event are unclear as the extant sources differ considerably.⁷ Although this is not an in-depth discussion of the precise circumstances of Spartan control, it is worthwhile considering what sanctions were imposed on Thebes. We know from the sources that while the invading force may have been small, it was certainly not passive. The population was 'enslaved',⁸ and Buck emphasises the distinct possibility of brutality on the part of the occupiers.⁹ The Spartan presence could have suppressed the city of Thebes by controlling access to its religious activities. It could be presumed that in times of trouble religion would be the logical place to turn. This idea can be contradicted by instances in the ancient Greek world that would refute this belief, and that when faced with difficult or downright disastrous conditions religious life was the first to suffer. Thucydides speaks of the usage of sacred spaces in Athens being pressed into service as accommodation during the Peloponnesian war – this suggests that the fear of pollution and sacrilege could be overridden.¹⁰ A garrison, as Schachter states, could have impeded citizen access to and from the sanctuary.¹¹ In combination with the exile, voluntary or not, of 300 of the citizen body,¹² it is inevitable that activity at the site would decrease. This change is seen in terms of some of the votive offerings present, and the cessation of the practice of incising votive potsherds.

It is obvious therefore that the architectural development of the site ceases during Spartan possession. The garrison lasted from 382 to 379 BC, and if we look at the wider information it becomes apparent that no building projects had commenced for at least 20 years prior to the occupation. Consequently, the Spartan control of Thebes had very little impact on the architectural development of the sanctuary.

However, Kabeiric Ware does continue throughout this period and is indicative of a strong level of popularity. Since we know that Kabeiric Ware was produced in Thebes for the sanctuary, it clearly shows that the city still had some level of normality. Pottery for dedication or ritual use is a simple case of supply and demand as there is no purpose in producing an object that no one wants. Indeed the first high point of Kabeiric ceramic production, based on the dating of the extant corpus, was c.380 BC. This ceramic evidence contradicts the observations that there was a lack of activity based on interpretations derived from the city's situation and the disappearance of the inscribed votive potsherds. This abandonment of the potsherds may therefore simply reflect another transition in the votive offerings of the site. The crossover periods between bronze bulls, terracotta figurines and Kabeiric Ware are not usually attributed to external influences.

5.2.2 Find Contexts

The find contexts of the ceramic material from the site show certain connections between the vessels and the architectural structures, an observation previously made in regard to the foundation deposits of the rectangular building. In terms of connecting site usage to the claims that the sanctuary underwent a decline following the Spartan occupation, it is those dated vases with find contexts that prove invaluable in determining the continued use of specific sanctuary locations.

On the basis of the (albeit limited) known find contexts for ceramics from Period IIIa, it is apparent that the majority of the vessels have been found in close proximity to existing structures. Most objects are located between the tholoi and the rectangular building. That the artefacts located are mainly skyphoi merely confirms Cooper and Morris's claims that these structures were used for dining and feasting.¹³ The evidence of the find contexts also supports the theory that during the earlier phases of the sanctuary's history it was the dining facilities, in conjunction with the cavea and the sacred rock, that formed the focus of the cult.

In iconographic terms there seems little evidence of deliberate selection of scene types. Out of 17 vases with provenances, nine vases depict human figures, and there is perhaps evidence of cult activity in the wreaths adorning many of the figures. The other illustrations show basic decoration, namely filler ornaments in the form of water birds and vegetative motifs. There seems to be no correlation between the meaning of the scenes and their find spots.

There have been discoveries of several vases outside the confines of the Kabeirion and because of Boeotia's poor reputation as an exporter of pottery it is hardly surprising that the ceramics are all located within the region.¹⁴ The example found in a single Theban grave probably points to the fact that the deceased was a member of the cult. The two vases from the Polyandrion at Thespiiai again imply that at least one of the Thebans interred there had some connection with the sanctuary. The uncertain provenance of Cat. No.701 is interesting if we consider it in conjunction with an undated inscription detailing a Kabeiric-associated name located in the vicinity of Tanagra.¹⁵ As there is no evidence of a cult centre within the Tanagra area, it could easily be proposed that some of the inhabitants of that city were affiliated with the Thebes-based cult. Alternatively, we could be witnessing the movement of some of the initiated Theban population from one city to another.

5.2.3 Ceramic Usage

In terms of overall usage, Period IIIa follows on very closely from Period II with the ceramics showing similar totals and variety of shapes. What is perhaps immediately noticeable, especially in the graph representing this data, is the vast increase in the occurrence of skyphoi. Period IIIa represents the first complex phase of ceramics at the Kabeirion. When considering the evidence by each quarter century it becomes clear that there are certain transitional changes taking place in terms of function.

The third quarter of the fifth century is an extension of ceramic practices founded in the sixth and early fifth centuries BC. We see a continuation of the use of objects closely associated with the twin ritual concepts of drinking and feasting. Observations reveal that kantharoi, pyxides/salt cellars and bowls all represent specific forms which were favoured. If we take a broader view it is obvious that while there are strong elements towards food display and consumption, as well as symposium-style drinking sets with which to prepare and imbibe the wine, there is also a significant focus on the preparation of food. Chytrai and lopadia are present in substantial numbers and when considering the ceramic corpus for this quarter century as a whole, they account for approximately 5% of the total.

The dramatic increase in the number of skyphoi from c.450 BC onwards point to the beginnings of the Kabeiric Ware style, and that specialisation in the choice of preferred vase shapes had already occurred.

The first quarter of the fourth century BC represents a zenith in terms of Kabeiric Ware consumption. This is largely connected with the significant increase in the amount of skyphoi discovered dating to this period. This rise in popularity of skyphoi use, whether it is for the physical consumption of alcohol or as dedications, also sees a decline in the variety of drinking vessels found at the sanctuary. The disappearance of kantharoi, karchesia and kylikes is gradual, as their numbers decline from the end of the fifth century due to the slow increase in popularity of the skyphos. A change in the material evidence of drinking also has a parallel in the evolving symposium practices of Hellenistic Athens. Here there was a move towards smaller, more personal parties where the guest was provided with an individual drinking set in order to prepare their own drinks, rather than a communal krater.¹⁶ The structures of the sanctuary would certainly support such a theory – the architecture (especially the tholoi) implies an almost familial arrangement.¹⁷ The food preparation elements missing in the previous quarter reappear in the form of cooking wares. In terms of recognisable votive offerings, Panathenaic amphora are present throughout this time, but it is only in the last 25 years of this period that their presence starts to become more noticeable.

5.2.4 Non-Kabeiric Ware Vase Painters

The vase painters whose work is present at the sanctuary during this period can be split into two clear categories, those who are classified as Kabeiric vase painters and those who are not. The non-Kabeiric group comprises artists from both Boeotia and Attica.

¹⁷ Schachter, 2003: 128.

Cat. No.	Plate No.	Object	Decoration	Date
592	73f	Panathenaic amphora	Part of the stomach and arm of a nude youth, probably an athlete. White fillet tied around the arm.	450-400 BC

A student and successor to the Kleophon Painter, but in Beazley's words with 'a less solemn and a sweeter form'.¹⁸ According to Beazley's classifications there are no other Panathenaic amphorae assigned to this painter. If this vase is indeed by the Dinos Painter, it is perhaps unique. The majority of his scene types belong to Dionysiac and symposiastic iconography which is in keeping with the ceramic styles of the Kabeirion, and there are no other works assigned to this artist except for the Panathenaic amphora. There are some examples of his work depicting youths, so it is possible that there are some strong similarities in manner of execution. Like the Panathenaic amphora fragment assigned to the Leagros Group, the more recent work on this vase form does not assign this piece to a specific artist.¹⁹

Attic Red Figure

The Painter of the Great Athenian Kantharos

This painter seems not to have any other extant work apart from the two vases mentioned here (Figures 5.5 & 5.6, p.185). There are no records for this individual outside the National Archaeological Museum in Athens,²⁰ and it is possible that this is a newly identified artist. Both of the vases that are included here are not mentioned in any of the previously published literature from the Kabeirion, but the scenes upon them would connect them with the sanctuary. The symposiastic nature of the depictions is obvious; in the first (Cat. No.701, Figure 5.5), a female figure brings offerings to a bearded reclining male who is holding a rhyton and a kylix. In the second (Cat. No.702), a swan drinks from a rhyton being held by a bearded reclining man. Whilst these scenes appear innocuous, the male bearded figure on both of these vases is identified as Kabeiros. The other side of Cat. No.702 shows Bellerophon astride Pegasos, a similar image features on other Kabeiric vases (i.e. the Satyr Painter, Cat. Nos.17 & 234, Pl.47b). Although there are references to other potential Kabeiric sites in Boeotia,²¹ it would be presumptuous to assume that these two vases should be attributed to another Boeotian Kabeiric sanctuary on the basis of the lack of literary or archaeological evidence.

²¹ The other sites identified are Anthedon, Larymna and Lebadeia (Schachter, 1986: 66, 110).

Boeotian Red Figure

The Argos Painter

Other vases: ARV 254, 288-289, 1642; Addenda 209; Para 355, 511.

The Argos Painter was the most prolific red figure vase painter in Boeotia during the second half of the fifth century.²⁴ The fragments (Cat. Nos.727, Pl.87c & 730, Pl.87d) both have a symposiastic theme; the inclusion of satyrs and kantharoi indicate a Dionysiac element to the Argos Painter's work. Likewise the skyphos (Cat. No.705, Pl.83a) with depictions of maenads, satyrs and a bearded figure, identified as Dionysos, would adhere to this artistic theme. Other vases attributed to this painter are from different provenances and cover a variety of subjects,²⁵ but it appears that it is only the Kabeiric ones which follow a Dionysiac theme.

The skyphos (Cat. No.706, Figure 5.6, p.188), is a curious example. Side A sees Aphrodite making her toilet; side B has Eros holding a large fillet in both hands.²⁶ Lullies observes that the depiction of Eros on side B recalls the work of the Argos Painter.²⁷ Yet the toilet scene on side A has no similarities to his other works. A. Ure argues that the rest of the skyphos is in the style of the Mystes Painter and that it may be attributed to the master, a pupil or an associate.²⁸ This would suggest that the Mystes and Argos Painters worked in close proximity to one another, but this vase is the only available evidence for this conclusion.

He is also bearded, balding and has pointed ears. The third facing left, is bearded, robed, has pointed ears and is holding up his arm. The hill is denoted by a reserved line. There are two dotted filler ornaments above the hill. B. Eros with a fillet. Quadruple palmette motif below handles. Handles, foot and interior are black. Reserved band above foot. 5.3 Early and Middle Kabeiric Ware

5.3.1 Early Kabeiric Ware 450-400 BC

It is in this early phase that Kabeiric Ware develops its recognisable style of caricature and grotesque and with it becomes more comfortable and established. The vases dated to this period, with certain exceptions, fail to depict cult activities in any great detail, as the intricacies of the rituals have not been set down on the ceramics. The artistic similarities to the Dionysian iconography are important, and it would appear that Kabeiric Ware had adopted the motifs from this particular cult. On the basis of the predominance of the Dionysiac elements it is clear that this was the stronger or more important deity at this point in history. The later significance of Kabeiros indicates a subsequent switch in power, leading to a more unique iconography. Independent ideas also arise contemporary to this adoption of the iconographic traditions.

Mystes Painter²⁹

For full catalogue of the Mystes Painter's vases from the Kabeirion, see Appendix 5.9 at the end of this chapter (p.210).

The work of this vase painter, then known as the Thetis Painter,³⁰ was first recognised by A. and P. Ure,³¹ and given the title Mystes Painter by Bruns.³² Braun and Haevernick date the Mystes Painter from the end of the fifth to the second quarter of the fourth century based on comparisons with other examples of dated pottery.³³ The relationship between the vases of the Mystes Painter and other pieces of Kabeiric Ware from the sanctuary is important in determining a chronological framework for the ceramics.³⁴ His style and artistic details are the forerunner for much of the Kabeiric iconography that ensues from this period. The highly distinctive, grotesquely caricatured figures typify the pottery. The figures of this painter are unusual for a number of reasons, one being the formation of the eye – a large triangle with a semicircular eyeball and dot to represent the pupil.³⁵ His work also strays into the realm of grotesque caricature which has been linked with the satyr plays and representations of comedy of the fifth century BC and earlier.³⁶ A deep indentation between the lip and the nose creates an almost bill-like facial expression and can be linked to the depiction of masks on Kabeiric vases.³⁷

5.3.2 Middle Kabeiric Ware 400-335 BC

The Polyandron of Thespiai, the grave monument established for the war dead from the Battle of Delion around 424 BC, provides firm evidence for dating Kabeiric Ware.³⁸ The three Kabeiric vases found (Cat. Nos.116, 701 & 968), were examined by Schilardi (along with other material) who reached the conclusion that these dated to c.380 BC.³⁹ This would confirm that Kabeiric Ware was established at this point. It should therefore be considered that evaluation of the pottery interred in the Thespian monument showed two clearly distinct chronological groups; one contemporary with the original burial and a second roughly 30-40 years later.⁴⁰ The Kabeiric Ware, based on Schilardi's dating, belongs to the latter group. This undoubtedly raises the question of why more vases were interred within an existing grave monument. Low suggests that following a period of political upheaval at the end of the fifth century there was a renewed emphasis for remembering the dead,⁴¹ and the re-establishment of a connection with the familiar symbols of a common past in which the community could actively engage in.⁴²

The use of the Thespian monument for the dating of Kabeiric Ware provides a valuable reference point. The fact that the ceramics were used as offerings for the dead indicates a certain level of recognition and supports the theory that this was the high point of Kabeiric Ware production. This is also shown in the quantities of material at the sanctuary, with the ceramics from the middle and later phases constituting a significant amount of the datable artefacts. In iconographic terms the vase scenes are more actively reflecting the specific cult rituals as shown in the work of this period's key vase painter.

Kabir Painter

For full catalogue of the Kabir Painter's vases from the Kabeirion, see Appendix 5.10 at the end of this chapter (p.219).

Contemporary with the latter half of the Mystes Painter's career, the Kabir Painter is undeniably the more mature of the artists. The influence of the Mystes Painter is clearly apparent; his grotesque elements are refined and developed under the Kabir Painter's hand. As with so many vase painters we see certain iconographic trends becoming a specialisation of the artist. Of the six Kabeiric skyphoi depicting images of Odysseus and Circe, four are by the Kabir Painter, one by the Mystes Painter and it is only the final vase (Cat. No.243, Pl.49a) held by the Archaeological Museum in Nauplion, that remains un-attributed.⁴³ All of the scenes refer to the same point in the poem – the attempt by Circe to enchant Odysseus in the same manner that had already allowed her to transform all of his men into swine. This scene must have been of some interest to the Kabir Painter as he is one of a minority who decorated vases with this image.

In the case of the Nauplion vase, it could be presumed that this skyphos, on the basis of its iconographic type, although not by either the Mystes or the Kabir Painter, may be by one of their associates or pupils. Based on the late fourth century date of the Nauplion vase, it is more likely to be a pupil of the Kabir Painter due to the difference in time between this vase and the other work of the Mystes Painter.

5.4 Period IIIb: 380-335 BC

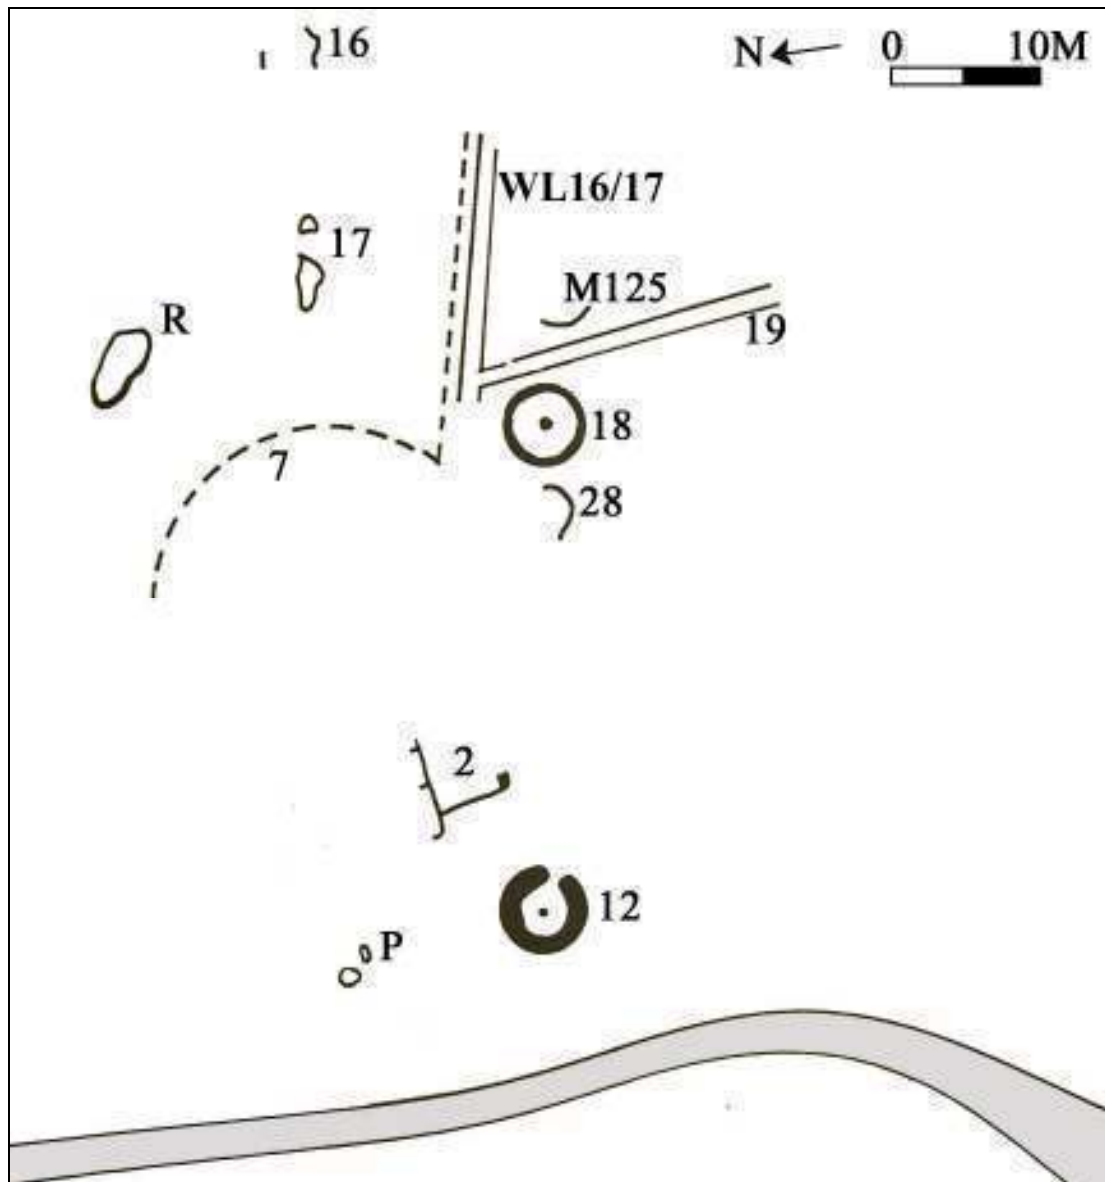

Figure 5.8: Period IIIb, after Schachter 1986, revised. Features: Rock R; Tholoi 12, 18, 28, M125; Pits P, 17; Rectangular Building 2, 16; Aqueduct 19; Water Conduits WL16, WL17; Cavea 7.

Period IIIb sees a vast alteration in the structure of the Kabeirion with the site expanding greatly. Changes to the natural cavea are present for the first time with a new cavea 7 being built up facing west. A second rectangular building 16 is also constructed. This building on the site of what will later become the niche (also referred to as 16) seems to fall out of commission by c.275 BC, so must have been in use between 380 and 275 BC. Ceramic evidence links it to the first quarter of the third century BC and supports the date of discontinuance suggested above.⁴⁴ The two pits 17, which are on the site of the later upper tholos, probably date to the second quarter of the fourth century as they appear to be contained within a stone enclosure.⁴⁵ Dating evidence for this enclosure comes from two kantharoi found there.⁴⁶ According to Heimberg, one of the kantharoi dates to the second quarter of the fourth century BC.⁴⁷

A water supply system also appears for the first time. Conduit WL16 channels the water from the stream (which runs east to west) and connects with conduit WL17. This also links up with the underground aqueduct 19 which brought water in from the south.⁴⁸ Extant research is not clear as to where these channelled waters ran. According to the evidence of water pipeline plans from both the nineteenth and twentieth century excavations, and some reconstruction based upon the available material, the pipelines WL16/17 and 19 are suggested here to run in the direction of the cavea.⁴⁹

For full catalogue of find contexts, see Appendix 5.11 at the end of this chapter (p.227).

There is a marked increase in the number of vases which date to Period IIIb, as opposed to IIIa, that have find contexts or provenances (IIIa: 17, IIIb: 55). What can be seen from observations based upon this information is that the greater importance still remains focused upon facilities associated with dining. The find contexts show a roughly hemispherical arrangement of ceramic objects orientated around the cavea and the sacred rock (Figure 5.8, p.192). The continued emphasis Ceramics from outside the sanctuary are scarce, with only a single example. Like the earlier vases discovered within the Thespian Polyandrion (Table 5.2, p.178), it is likely that at least one of the interred had a connection with the sanctuary.

5.4.3 Ceramic Usage

In relation to Period IIIa, Period IIIb sees a marked downturn in the ceramic usage at the complex with the skyphoi being seen in smaller numbers than in their peak around 400-375 BC. We know that during the years between Thebes' liberation from the Spartans, and the destruction of the city in 335 BC by Alexander the Great, there was a long phase of military activity (Figure 5.9, p.194).

If Thebes was in a constant aggressive/defensive state during these years it would undoubtedly explain the apparent wane in activity at the sanctuary. A decline, rather than a transition, would explain why the ceramics found are faithful to the traditions in function seen in the earlier phases. The same vases are there, just simply in fewer numbers.

Skyphoi still remain the most important vessel at the sanctuary; their numbers are much lower, but they are consistently present. The popularity of the skyphos in this period is presumably related to the rise of the Kabeiric Ware iconography which proved so popular at the site. Other ceramic types see a much greater decrease, especially the alternative forms of drinking and cooking vessels. The other material continuing to appear is similar in content to the earlier phases but the emphasis is still placed on symposia or ritual feasting. The Panathenaic amphorae as dedicatory offerings carry on, though in lower numbers than Period IIIa.

5.5 Period IV: 335-315 BC

5.5.1 The Site

Following rumours of the death of Alexander the Great in 335 BC, the city of Thebes revolted, only to be crushed by Alexander's forces soon after.⁵¹ Although some of the population was allowed to live, around 6000 were killed in battle and the rest sold into slavery.⁵² Corresponding evidence from the Kabeirion would corroborate the theory that when Thebes fell the sanctuary went through a similar phase of decline.⁵³ The archaeological evidence suggests that the black glaze kantharoi and the terracotta figurines both disappear from the site around this time.⁵⁴ Kabeiric Ware does seem to have continued in the last quarter of the fourth century and on into the third century, an indication perhaps that activity may have continued, ⁵¹ Hornblower, 2002: 287.

⁵² According to Plut., Alc. (11) amongst those spared were the priests, a few citizens on friendly terms with the Macedonians, the descendants of the poet Pindar and those citizens who had opposed the revolt.

⁵³ Schachter, 1986: 79.

⁵⁴ Heimberg, 1982: Pl.67; Schmaltz, 1974: 17.

although on a far smaller scale than earlier in the century.⁵⁵ It could also be proposed that the ceramics from the last quarter of this century were made following the revival of Thebes as some of the vases were found in the foundation deposits of buildings constructed during Period V.⁵⁶

5.5.2 Find Contexts

Despite the current consensus that points to an abandonment of the sanctuary following Alexander's destruction of the city of Thebes, there are vases that appear to contradict this argument. Those vases dating directly to the supposed abandonment phase do indicate that there was still some activity at the site, albeit limited. Those vases for which we have find contexts again strongly correspond with the dining structures, as skyphoi were all found in close proximity to one of the circular buildings. This relationship between ceramic use and dining seems to be the only one which continued throughout the abandonment phase.

5.5.3 Ceramic Usage

If we consider this evidence in conjunction with the observations made regarding the find contexts of some of the information detailed in Table 5.10 (p.196), it is clear that the material with provenances shows a strong corroboration between ritual drinking and the dining facilities. This is based on the skyphoi located in the proximity of these structures. The dated artefacts though show a slightly wider picture of ceramic usage. Dedication pieces are still present at the site indicating that, while ritual drinking appears to be the most important aspect, votive offerings were not forgotten.

Table 5.10: Chronological usage of ceramics in Period IV.

Not included within this period are a large group of unguentaria (Cat. Nos.1892-1898, totalling more than 650 vases) dated to the fourth century, probably post 336 BC. These are incorporated into Period V. The decision to omit them from Period IV is due to the decline of offerings at the sanctuary during this phase. Although there are still some dedications being made, such a large deposit would contradict all of the other evidence for this period.

5.6 Late Kabeiric Ware

The current opinion seems to link the end of certain site activities with the destruction of Thebes by Alexander the Great. Kabeiric Ware continues to be produced, used and deposited, signifying a continuation of tradition even if the sanctuary was suffering. Unlike the earlier ceramics the iconography does not include as many figurative scenes, as the majority of the dated vases depict ornaments of flora and vegetation.

Satyr Painter

The last of the known Kabeiric vase painters in the late fourth century BC. In contrast to the heavily floral wares of the later years, the Satyr Painter remained faithful to figurative scenes. The style though has undergone severe changes: the caricature and grotesque has been reduced and the Dionysian theme, visible in the proto-Kabeiric and early phases, has reappeared. The Satyr Painter owes more to the earlier Kabeiric Ware periods with their Dionysos-focused repertoire than the phase that immediately preceded him. The symposium-style images consist mainly of dancing satyrs, maenads and Pan, with one character playing a flute. Amongst the vases are a number that are only decorated with ornamental motifs based on flora. Ivy, vines and grapes are the sole decoration on five skyphoi and fragments.

5.7.1 The Site

New construction at the site dating to the last quarter of the fourth century would point to a revival in Theban fortunes. A new circular building, the upper tholos 17, was built on the site of two earlier pits constructed in Period IIIb.⁵⁷ The water supply system was also extended with a reservoir 20 being built at the southern end of the aqueduct 19, dating to the third century BC.⁵⁸

The appearance of an apsidal building 10 is cause for debate, as its construction date is unknown. Kabeiric Ware⁵⁹ found in the deposits of the building has been

5.7.2 Find Contexts

For full catalogue of find contexts, see Appendix 5.13 at the end of this chapter (p.236).

When considering the find contexts of the ceramic objects found in Period V, it is important to note that the traditional focal points of cavea and sacred rock remain central. If we plot the major find contexts upon a site plan, the hemispherical arrangement of activity continues to follow the dining structure layout (Figure 5.12, p.202).

Interestingly many of the finds are located either within, or in the proximity of the middle round building, tholos 18. All of these fragments are from skyphoi which would suggest that it was perhaps this structure that was more important. The dining structures, M125 and 28, to either side of the middle round building, do not have ceramic material in the same quantities as tholos 18. This discrepancy in terms of building use is peculiar as there is no evidence to indicate that there were preferences regarding which structures to use.

The largest body of artefacts with find contexts comprises over 650 unguentaria, all located in the area of the stairs, near walls M35 and M46. Whilst this may be a dedicatory deposit of ceramics, there are other offerings present. The bronze, lead and terracotta artefacts also located here predate the unguentaria and imply that this accumulation may be the result of the deliberate disposal of older votives.

There are, in this early Hellenistic phase, a few pieces of Kabeiric Ware being found away from the sanctuary and indeed Boeotia itself (Table 5.11). The two examples from Aegina are of dubious provenance, but we know of the existence of a sanctuary of the Megaloi Theoi at Piraeus and it has been suggested that the ceramics from the island are connected to this cult centre.⁶¹ The vase from Keos may be the result of a cult of the Telchines being present on the island, a group known to have a connection with the Kabeiroi.⁶²

It is clear when comparing Period V (early Hellenistic) to the Classical era that the ceramics were no longer of the same importance. The first quarter century (325-300 BC) demonstrates a dramatic decline in the general material used. The diminished quantities of ceramics for feasting and drinking perhaps suggest a change in the cult activities following the eventful years of Period IV and the destruction and regeneration of the city of Thebes. Curiously, while alternative ceramic types diminish, Kabeiric Ware undergoes a revival of its own. This second peak in the production of this ceramic style clearly marks an increase in the pottery, and this revival could stem from the re-establishment of the city.

With the rebuilding of Thebes in 315 BC by Cassander,⁶³ the city adopted the motif of Heracles triumphant in his labours.⁶⁴ The concept of Thebes as a resurgent and dominant power could explain the increase in Kabeiric Ware. If a city wished to demonstrate to other powers that it was firmly re-established, an upsurge in the undertakings of both the city and her associated satellites would not be surprising. If we consider the sanctuary of the Kabeiroi as a satellite, a renewal in the levels of activity following the reconstruction of Thebes would indicate a flourishing Theban society. That Kabeiric Ware is the main beneficiary of this upturn lies in its iconographic value. The Kabeiric style is so closely intertwined with the site at this date it could be interpreted as being a symbolic representation of the cult. It is therefore not unexpected that the focus of the ceramic usage is placed so firmly on the decorated Kabeiric skyphoi. Interestingly, the motif adopted by Thebes is that of Heracles, but there are no vases from this period carrying him as part of the decoration. Those Kabeiric vases bearing images of Heracles all date to the early part of the fourth century BC.

The subsequent further decline of ceramic use is closely tied to the end of Kabeiric Ware. The growing trends of the following periods, such as the Hellenistic relief ware bowls, point to a society with very different tastes in relation to their choice of dedicatory or ritually used objects. Kabeiric Ware effectively dies in the middle of the Hellenistic era, a victim of ceramic fashion. We do know that changes in the offerings at the sanctuary are not connected to a lessening in interest of the Kabeiroi. Rather what we see is an evolution in the cult itself – this change heralds a move away from the circular dining structures, towards a mystery cult organised more closely along the lines of the great Eleusinian mysteries.

5.8 Summary

There are three key conclusions pertaining to the Classical-early Hellenistic period which need to be outlined. Firstly, the evolution of the sanctuary itself, as there appears to be no dramatic changes in the actual arrangement. The focus of all the structures is centred upon the cavea area and the sacred rock. The hemispherical arrangement of the circular, and then the later rectangular, dining rooms around the perimeter of the cavea suggests that it was this area that was of greater importance to the activities practised there. These small, presumably communal dining facilities indicate a degree of social interaction and are often depicted on the Kabeiric vases themselves. Secondly, when considering the ceramics in relation to the structures we see a high correlation between ceramic type and function, and the buildings with which they appear to be connected. The existence of food preparation objects and the evidence found in the dining structures signify that ritual banquets were cooked and served within the tholoi.⁶⁵ The third point relates specifically to the ceramics and clearly indicates the importance of ritual dining and drinking. The ceramics show a typically high usage of all manner of drinking vessels, ⁶⁵ Cooper and Morris, 1990: 66.

plus more material associated with the storage, preparation and serving of alcoholic beverages, as well as the aforementioned food-associated objects. Interestingly the appearance and use of Kabeiric Ware is easily visible in a chronological analysis of the sanctuary's ceramics. This would imply that if Kabeiric Ware were removed from the equation there is a background level of ceramics at the site which remains reasonably constant throughout the majority of its lifespan. Kabeiric Ware may therefore represent an anomaly rather than the norm.

The information from the vase painters whose work is represented at the site allows us to elicit certain observations regarding not only the ceramic production system present at Thebes, but also the flow of vases into Boeotia by personal transportation or trade. Despite the numerous pottery examples from Thebes, there is nothing in the archaeological record that identifies the city's ceramic production centre in the same way that the potters' quarters have been located at Corinth or at Athens.⁶⁷ Therefore, any points we make concerning the manufacture of ceramics is dependent on the vase painters themselves. On the basis of the observations made in relation to the artistic evidence (i.e. iconography, execution, etc.), it has been possible to recognise tentative connections amongst the Boeotian workshops (Figure 5.15, p.208).

This is a concept supported by the vase that appears to feature both the Mystes and the Argos Painters; such collaboration would only be possible if there was a certain level of co-operation in existence within the potters' quarters at Thebes.

5.10 Appendix: Vases by the Kabir Painter

Table 5.14a: Vases by the Kabir Painter.

Cat. No.	Plate No.	Object	Decoration	Date
13	3b-c	Hydria	Ivy chain on shoulder, below is a black band. Below in figure scene is the back of a large animal, probably a bull. This suggests that the full scene, which has been lost, contained either a bull being offered to a reclining Kabeiros or to a Herm. On neck is the inscription, "Smikros dedicated [me] to the Kabeiroi" (ΣΜΙΚΡΟΣ ΑΝΕΘΕΚΕ ΚΑΒΙΡΟΙ). The uninscribed area of neck is black, with a reserved band on the edge of the lip.	Early 4 th Century BC
16	3d	Oinochoe	Two robed maenads, dancing, both carrying a thyrsus in their hands. To right a satyr playing a double flute. On the shoulder an ivy chain. A thin black band separates the main scene and the shoulder decoration.	Early 4 th Century BC
98	25a-c	Skyphos	A. At right of scene Kabeiros, looking to the left, reclining, robes bunched around his waist, holding a drinking horn in one hand. Behind him, also facing left, a large bull. To the left a procession approaches him, small robed boy in the front, behind him a man, also robed, with a staff and aryballos or purse in one hand, the other upraised. Behind two opposed women, their hair bound up, one carrying a skyphos. Above are vines and grapes. B. Symposium scene: To the right, two men, partially robed, looking towards the centre of the scene. In the centre a nude dancer and robed male flute player who faces left. To the left two partially robed men, but this time caricatured. Possibly a before and after symposium scene. Above are vines and grapes. Triple black band below, one acts as a base line. Base of body is decorated with black and white leaves. Rim is black.	Early 4 th Century BC
100	-	Skyphos	Couch with table in front with kantharos and food on it.	Early 4 th Century BC

Table 5.14b: Vases by the Kabir Painter.

Cat. No.	Plate No.	Object	Decoration	Date
101	-	Skyphos	A. Two opposed figures, the one to the right appears to be a male using a walking stick, the left one may be female. A nude male stands between them balancing a tray on one hand which containing three sacrificial cakes. Side B is unknown. Below the figure scene, black bands. Foot is black.	Early 4 th Century BC
102	27a	Skyphos	Facing right, a silen or possibly an ogre.	Early 4 th Century BC
105	-	Skyphos	Scene is unclear but probably a scene from a symposia. Lines could be a couch and table. The second fragment (Pl.24.7) is ambiguous.	Early 4 th Century BC

Cat. No.	Plate No.	Object	Decoration	Date
108	-	Skyphos	A. Pygmies and cranes, B. Pygmies and billy goat.	Early 4 th Century BC
110	-	Skyphos	Vines and bunches of grapes.	Early 4 th Century BC
112	-	Skyphos	Jumping jackal behind grapevine.	Early 4 th Century BC
113	31a	Skyphos	Vines and bunches of grapes. Rim is black. Two black bands around the centre of the body. Foot is black.	Early 4 th Century BC
114	-	Skyphos	Back profile of a satyr.	Early 4 th Century BC

Table 5.14d: Vases by the Kabir Painter.

117	-	Skyphos	A. Odysseus and Circe. B. Hare, birds and vegetation.	Early 4 th Century BC
118	32a-b	Skyphos	A. Wrestling groups. First pair, two opposed nude males reaching out towards one another, both figures are fragmentary. Second pair, opposed nude males holding each other's arms. Standing to the right and facing left, single male figure, wearing short robe, helmet, carrying a shield – his position suggests he is about to start running. All figures are probably pygmies. B. Facing right, nude male figure (probably a pygmy) with traces of spear in one hand, running towards two water birds. Both birds facing right, the first is on the ground with wings outstretched, the second has just gone into flight. Vines above. Below both figure scenes is a black band and a reserved band. Rim, base of body and foot are black.	Early 4 th Century BC
119	-	Skyphos	A. Robed man walking to right with hound who is alert and paying attention to the figure. B. Nude male with horned headdress, chlamys over one arm, spear in the other, appears to be baiting the hound to right of scene. Hound is jumping at the spear, front paws off the ground and mouth open. Above both scenes are vines and bunches of grapes. Below scenes, double black band. Rim, base of body and foot are black. Single reserved band just above the foot.	Early 4 th Century BC

123	-	Skyphos	Vines and bunches of grapes. Below, black band. From remaining fragments it is clear that the rim and lower part of the body are black.	Early 4 th Century BC

128	-	Skyphos	Facing left, nude boy playing a double flute.	Early 4 th Century BC
134	-	Skyphos	Facing right, naked youth, probably Pais.	Early 4 th Century BC
135	35c	Skyphos	Facing left, naked youth, possibly Pais or an athlete.	Early 4 th Century BC

Table 5.14g: Vases by the Kabir Painter.

Cat. No.	Plate No.	Object	Decoration	Date
136	34e-f	Skyphos	A. Facing right, nude pygmy, running. Head and lower part of arms missing. B. Tangle of limbs, said to be a fallen soldier. It seems more likely to be a pygmy or caricatured nude male who has fallen on their back.	Early 4 th Century BC

Cat. No.	Plate No.	Object	Decoration	Date
542	66c	Bowl	Facing left, Kabeiros, fillet around the forehead, reclining on a couch which is just visible behind him. Kantharos held outstretched in one hand. Above, another fillet appears to be tied to an imaginary ceiling. To left, vines, to right, two upturned lines ending with points – possibly the horns of a bull. Rim is black.	Early 4 th Century BC
564	-	Lid, Unknown Vessel	Ivy chain motif circling knob. Knob and rim are black.	Early 4 th Century BC
708	82f	Skyphos	Black and white vine leaves. Double incised line above and below. Five black bands around centre of the body.	Early 4 th Century BC

5.12 Appendix: Vases by the Satyr Painter

Table 5.16a: Vases by the Satyr Painter.

Cat. No.	Plate No.	Object	Decoration	Date
17	-	Oinochoe	Pegasos flying, presumably a scene from the story of Bellerophon and the Chimaera. Ivy chain on shoulder. Neck, mouth, handle, base of body and foot are black. The remainder of the vase is unspecified.	Late 4 th Century BC
222	45a	Skyphos	Vines with grapes. Below vines, one black and one reserved band. Rim, handles and lower half of body are black.	Late 4 th Century BC

229	46c-d	Skyphos	A. In the centre of the scene the trunk of a vine, this splits into two, one going left, the other right. Vines are covered in leaves and bunches of grapes. B. Again a central trunk and the same two stems with leaves and bunches of grapes. Central trunk appears to be more like a palm tree with spiky leaves protruding from the top. Few dots as filler ornament. Thick black band below the figure scene. Rim, part of the handles and foot are black. Remainder of the vase is reserved.	Late 4 th Century BC
230	46e	Skyphos	A.-B. Vines. According to the excavation reports all of the decoration below the vines is modern.	Late 4 th Century BC
231	-	Skyphos	Vines and bunches of grapes emerging from a central stem. Broad black band below, rim and foot are black, remainder of vase is reserved.	Late 4 th Century BC
232	47a	Skyphos	Two vines and bunches of grapes emerging from a central trunk. More vertical stems also protrude from the top of the central trunk. Broad black band below. Rim, interior and foot are black.	Late 4 th Century BC

235	48a	Skyphos	The vase is said to have been lost during WW2. A. Symposium scene: Three partially robed male figures, reclining on couches, small tables laden with items in front of them. The feet of all three figures are directed towards the left. The first figure is looking left, the second right, the third left. The third also holds aloft a large drinking cup similar in shape to a bowl or skyphos. B. Symposium scene: Two fragments known. The first showing a female figure facing right, in long robes, playing double flute. There is an object behind her, in front of her the end of a couch with the occupant's feet visible. The second, partially robed male figure, facing left, reclining on couch. It would seem probable that the feet seen on the fragment with the flute player connect to this figure. Behind the reclining male and facing left, youthful nude servant with wreath, carrying an oinochoe and kantharos, presumably to serve the reclining figure. Behind the servant, a large amphora. Vines and bunches of grapes above both scenes. Broad black band below the figure scenes, the rim and horizontal parts of the handles are black. Below the black band is a large ivy chain motif.	Late 4 th Century BC
236	48b	Skyphos	Branches of a tree. Rim is black.	Late 4 th Century BC

Chapter Six

The Archaic – Early Hellenistic Periods

The Iconographic Evidence

6.1 Introduction

The iconographic evidence from Kabeiric Ware and other ceramics is one of our primary sources for the activities at the cult centre with some research having already been carried out on the subject. This large body of evidence needs further examination and the subsequent discussion consists of two aspects. The first is a reclassification of the material into a new and revised iconographic catalogue summarising the scenes and interpreting their meaning. The second aspect (which accompanies the catalogue) is a discussion of some of the key iconographic features. The aim of this chapter is to present a clear and logical introduction to the information provided by the Kabeiric Ware ceramics, as well as contributing insights into the motivations for its inspiration.

6.2 The Illustrations of Ritual Practice and Activity

The following catalogue describes the main scenes found on the vases from the Kabeirion. Schachter was of the opinion that the vases show a chronological sequence of activities at the sanctuary,¹ and this was divided into three main sections:

1. Arrival at the Sanctuary and Preliminary Events.
2. Preparation for Initiation.
3. The Panegyris.

For this reclassification of the iconographic material the conventional categories proposed by Schachter have been retained and previous work by other scholars has been considered.² The allocation of many of the scene types and the detailing of the contents and imagery is based upon the artefacts themselves rather than previously published material.

Because of the large quantities involved, this catalogue does not contain a complete list of all the vases belonging to each scene type – rather, a selection of relevant examples will be provided. Likewise, not all the pottery from the sanctuary can be indexed into the sections identified below. There are a number of omissions which include some ceramics with scenes linked to other mystery sites and those pieces which are too fragmentary to be classified with reasonable confidence. Fragments unfortunately often lack the key features that allow for attributions to be carried out successfully.

6.3 Stage One: Arrival at the Sanctuary and Preliminary Events

6.3.1 Processions

A. Processions of men and women walking and dancing, sometimes accompanied by musicians. The participants can be nude or robed and often wear headbands or branches in their hair. Some carry lit torches.

B. Parody version: Procession scene runs right to left. At the front a robed man walks with hands together above his head, behind him two musicians, one of whom is sitting on the other's shoulders. Cart being pulled by donkeys in which two figures, male and female, sit facing one another, female carrying a circular object in one of her hands. At the end of the procession another man tries to board the cart. Apart from the couple, all the other figures, including the donkeys, wear branches on their heads. Possibly a version of the Hieros Gamos (ἱερὸς γάμος), the sacred marriage (Figure 6.3, p.245).

The presence of a possible sacred marriage scene is intriguing. This perhaps is further proof for the idea that the Kabeiric cult absorbed the ideas and iconography of an earlier Dionysian sect at Thebes. In Athens at the Anthesteria, the annual festival of Dionysos, a ritual marriage between the deity and the wife of the Archon Basileus was performed.⁶ This union saw the wife, or Basilinna, enact various rituals before being presented, married and bedded by Dionysos.⁷ The ceremony required the Basilinna to enter a forbidden room and extract an oath from those who were performing the secret rites and sacrifices prior to her being joined with the god.⁸ Part of the process included a bridal procession and the bride and bridegroom can clearly be seen on the Kabeiric vase. There are also some representations on Attic red figure vases which are said to show elements of the marriage.⁹ It is assumed that the union blesses the fertility of the city and is summarised as a 'renewal of the blood of the community and the life of the soil'.¹⁰ On an iconographic level the sacred marriage of Dionysos is based upon the story of his union with Ariadne following her abandonment by Theseus.¹¹ As Thebes was a cult primarily concerned with fertility and reproduction, the presence of such a scene is not out of place. In the case of the Kabeiric cult it could possibly represent the wedding of Harmonia and Kadmus: this was part of the festivities celebrated at the sanctuary of the Great Gods on Samothrace.¹²

Daumas has explored the possibilities of marriage within the Kabeiric cult in more detail,¹³ but many of those arguments do not appear to be fully justified. From the ceramic corpus three vases are perceived as having marriage scenes. The first is normally identified as an image of initiation (Cat. No.83, Figure 6.1, p.245, Pl.20a-b). The second is of Hermes, Pan and various other figures (Cat. No.579, Figure 6.2, p.245). The third is a processional scene with a man and woman on board a cart (Cat. No.97, Figure 6.3, p.245, Pl.23c). Daumas postulates that in the first illustration the fully shrouded figure is a bride, and that the two women to the far side are matrons.¹⁴ One of these women is holding a fillet normally worn by married females but which is also frequently seen on the Kabeiric vases knotted in a triangular fashion around the heads of the initiated. This is the only representation upon Kabeiric vases which features a robed figure (the gender is impossible to discern), and Daumas admits that the crown of foliage on the head is something normally associated with initiation.¹⁵ The vase with Hermes and Pan is unfortunately unclear in its subject matter. Whilst we can recognise the figures, the exact scene being depicted is ambiguous. It is possible that all the characters are initiates in disguise and that 'Pan' is presenting the 'bride' to 'Hermes'. To the right a male figure, again identified as Hermes, shows the next stage of the story as he swings the bridal belt above his head.¹⁶ This figure is missing his hat and his feet, so definite confirmation of this character's divine status is absent, nor can we say conclusively that it is a bridal belt above his head. Much of the imagery to the right has fragments missing, obliterating an entire figure. It also lacks the theatrical quality seen on other Kabeiric vases and there is no evidence to suppose that the figures are wearing masks or other costume devices. Discussion of this vase elsewhere offers an interpretation based on homosexual rites of passage, between a youth and an older man.¹⁷ The processional vase (Figure 6.3, p.245) is also problematic, and although it is normally indicated as representing a parody version of the Hieros Gamos, there is no proof to confirm or refute this statement. Loucas-Durie offers three interpretations relating to marriage: firstly, that it is a wedding procession, secondly a Hieros Gamos or sacred marriage.¹⁸ A third option is quickly dismissed, that of a wedding procession associated with the Daidala festival, as this festival was not celebrated in Thebes until after 316 BC, well after the death of the vase painter.¹⁹ If we accept Daumas' argument, that the female figure represents a bride, why then is she not veiled?²⁰

6.3.2 Goods for the Initiation

Amphora arriving at the sanctuary in a horse-drawn cart; the horses are being led by a male robed figure. They approach a robed woman who is standing to the right; next to her placed on a stand is an amphora. Above are vines and bunches of grapes (Figure 6.4).

6.3.3 Sacrifices to Hermes

Group of figures, both male and female, bringing offerings to a Herm which is sitting to the right of the scene. Offerings are often shown on platters, and there are a number of instances where a sacrificial boar or bull is presented to the Herm (Figure 6.5).

6.3.4 Other Offerings

These figures, both male and female, are frequently seen bringing offerings (i.e. vases, fillets, animals, platters, etc.) towards an object. This object, on some of the better preserved fragments, can be identified as an altar (Figure 6.6).

6.4 Stage Two: Preparation for Initiation

6.4.1 Initiates

The initiate is shown robed with head entirely concealed by fabric; hands are similarly covered by folded material. A wreath is placed around the head, and the gender is uncertain. Accompanying this character are men and women who are also robed but with heads exposed; the men wearing wreaths and the women with a shawl shielding their hair. Some of the men are carrying drinking vessels; the women have a fillet. In the centre is a grotesque nude male with headband and wreath on head and lit torches in his hands (Figure 6.7).

6.4.2 Officials and the Initiated

The officials and those initiated are illustrated on a number of vases; these robed figures are usually male. On their heads are wreaths and/or headbands; the majority hold staffs though some may also carry branches. Most of the scenes show them standing or walking in procession (Figure 6.8).

Figure 6.8: Votive gesture possibly performed by an official or a suppliant at the sanctuary (Cat. No.152, Pl.37a).²⁵

6.4.3 The Initiation of Pan

Pan is dancing at the centre of the image and usually faces outwards. He can have human or goat legs and is sometimes depicted playing the double flute or tambourine. He is normally flanked either side by men or satyrs who are dancing in a similar manner (Figure 6.9, p.251). There appears to be no justification in describing this as an initiation ceremony of a deity.

6.4.4 Women: Their Role within the Mystery Cult

Our perspective of women in ancient Greece is dominated by the Athenocentric nature of the extant material. There is a considerable lack of information regarding the status of Boeotian women. We cannot assume that women across the Greek world were treated in the same fashion; one only has to compare the life of an Athenian woman with a Spartan female to appreciate the differences. If the women of Boeotia lived like those of Sparta, the critics of this region would surely have picked up on this fact as further proof of their backwardness. If we make the assumption that the similarities are in fact more in line with the Athenian model, the amount of information available allows us to make a greater variety of observations.

The role of women in the ancient world is an interesting topic. Their positions were restricted exclusively to the domestic sphere and contact with men, apart from their own male relatives, was not allowed. Their status was negligible and women appear to have been classified in the same social status bracket as slaves and children.²⁷ An extract from an extant fragment of Euripides' Melanippe clearly states a woman's role:

Women manage homes and preserved goods which are brought from abroad. Houses where there is no wife are neither orderly nor prosperous. And in religion – I take this to be important – we women play a large part.²⁸

This is not a comment made by a woman on her role, rather it is the opinion of a man, in this case Euripides, on what men expected a woman to do. Like so much of history, our evidence is based on viewpoints from the dominant strata of society. Women have not written the sources upon which we depend, and for the vast majority of our information we only have it from the male perspective.²⁹

The point of importance in the fragment from Melanippe is that women enjoyed a central role in religion. This was one aspect of ancient Greece in which women played a recognised part.³⁰ Many modern scholars emphasise the fact that, while women did not operate in the political or public life of the ancient city, it was in the religious activities that they carried out roles which gave them 'status and significance'.³¹ Further proof from Athens regarding the Dionysiac festivals certainly confirms a strong female presence inside the cult,³² and the positions women held are represented in the iconography from elsewhere in Greece. S. Lewis' volume on Athenian women utilises the evidence of the Attic iconographic record to discuss the types of ritual scenes in which females feature.³³

That women performed a role in the mysteries is a fact known from the evidence for Eleusis. While men dominated certain aspects of the activities within the cult, priestesses were also of importance.³⁴ From the information still available we can see that many of the official posts were either held by women or had female assistants. Of a similar standing to the hierophantes (chief priest), were the hierophantides (the priestesses of Kore and Demeter), and the Chief Priestess of Demeter.³⁵ Besides these major figures there were other female roles, the dadouchousa, a female assistant to the dadouchos (torchbearer, male), and a group of priestesses, the panageis, women who were kept segregated from the men.³⁶ That the Kabeirion had similar openings for both men and women is affirmed in the iconographic representations. A number of vase scenes show depictions of male and female officials. There is nothing to verify the existence of a group like the panageis, but there is a Hellenistic funerary epigram by Callimachus that confirms the role of a priestess within the Kabeirion. The particular focus of this priestess with strong female figures such as Demeter and Cybele does suggest that there was, in the Kabeiric cult, a female presence. Unfortunately, there are no references as to who exactly this woman was, or where she carried out her duties as a priestess.³⁷

I, the old woman who am now dust was once the priestess of Demeter and again of the Kabiri [Kabeiroi] and afterwards of Cybele. I was patroness of many young women. I had two male children and closed my eyes at a goodly age in their arms. Go in peace.³⁸

From the Kabeiric ceramics we know of certain activities having male/female divisions. The concept of gendered space is one we know from domestic housing arrangements. The notion of gendered zones within the home points to a division between male and non-male sections.³⁹ Female (or non-male) areas were only reachable by family members, not outsiders, and would have to be accessed by passing through the male domain.⁴⁰ These divisions appear to be flexible. Dining with male family members was permissible, but if guests were present women retreated elsewhere within the abode.⁴¹ This segregation of the sexes is seen at symposia, including those held at the Kabeirion. Respectable women would not attend these events and representations of women at such occasions are often said to be the images in which we can identify hetairai or hired entertainers.⁴² Attendance of symposia is the main method of separating honourable women from hetairai.⁴³ Women are occasionally seen in illustrations which could be described as symposia or symposia-like. These figures, usually flute players or dancers, are not normally perceived as reputable women. Figures such as flute players are not classified in the same manner as wives. There is a presumed absence or exclusion of women from certain places, such as the Prytaneion, owing to the fact that they would have defiled the area. There are exceptions to this rule. Evidence from Naukratis states that 'it is not possible for a woman to go into the Prytaneion, except the flute girl'.⁴⁴ This signifies a difference in attitudes towards women. A wife would not be allowed to enter a particular section, but a hired individual, whether male or female, could be admitted without fear of retribution. If the female figures appearing at the Kabeirion are not wives, something that iconographic studies from elsewhere prove, then they must belong to the category of working women. This observation contradicts the idea that the sanctuary was fully accessible to both men and women. Entrance and initiation may have been available to both sexes, but participation in certain practices still followed strict gender divisions. The presence of flute girls, which S. Lewis identifies as hired entertainers,⁴⁵ and therefore not confined to the restrictions of female family members, supports the idea that the site was open to slaves. Many prostitutes would be slaves and there is no reason to assume that this cannot also be the case for some musicians.⁴⁶

6.5.2 Revelry: Music and Dance within Ritual Space

Music, poetry, the dance – to the Greek, then, they were all facets of the same thing, the art which they called mousikē, ‘the art of the Muses’.⁵⁰

The role of music and dance in the ancient community and group is well known.⁵¹ Papadopoulou summarises the three main functions of music and dance: to please the god, to exert a magical (or hypnotic?) influence over the god and to contribute to the epiphany of the god.⁵² Much of the iconographic evidence follows a standardised form and so curtails our ability to extract specific details from the image regarding setting, cult or occasion.⁵³ In contrast, the portrayals from the Kabeirion present an interesting opportunity. If we consider that the pottery was made and decorated exclusively for this one sanctuary, the iconography preserved must depict activities at that particular centre. Shapiro's lament that we cannot identify setting, cult or occasion has no bearing here.⁵⁴ We do know that the site, the gods and the occasion are highly likely to be connected with the celebrations following the initiation ceremonies, and the subsequent discussion focuses on music and dance within the ancient cult.

The Greeks had a significant selection of musical instruments: wind, string and percussion. An understanding of music was essential to a young Greek's schooling, and without this knowledge he was considered uneducated.⁵⁵ Kabeiric vases only provide examples of three instruments, the aulos or flute, the lyre and the tympanon (Figure 6.13).

The aulos or flute is the 'omnipresent musical instrument in almost every Greek cult and ceremony'.⁵⁶ When taking into account the predominance with which it features on the ceramics of the Kabeirion, this observation seems appropriate. The frequency of the image can be partly accounted for by the popularity and skill of flute players in the city of Thebes. By the fifth century Thebes was recognised as one of the flute-playing centres of the Greek world. This opinion is testified by ancient sources such as Dio Chrysostom, 'Greece judges Thebes to be victor with the flute'.⁵⁷ This apparent rise in popularity and the attribution of skill may be connected with the decline of the flute in Athens. This lack of interest, according to Plutarch, is often ascribed to Alcibiades:

He refused to play the flute, holding it to be an ignoble and illiberal thing...blowing on a flute, and even his own kinsmen could scarcely recognise his features...the flute closed and barricaded the mouth, robbing its master of both voice and speech..."Flutes, then," said he, "for the sons of Thebes, they know not how to converse."...Alcibiades emancipated himself from this discipline, and the rest of the boys as well. For word soon made its way to them that Alcibiades loathed the art of flute-playing and scoffed at its disciples, and rightly, too. Wherefore the flute was dropped entirely from the programme of a liberal education and was altogether despised.⁵⁸

It has been suggested that the reformulation of mythology was connected to the dismissal of the flute as a vulgar instrument by the Athenians.⁵⁹ The origins of the flute were reconsidered in the stories from the fifth century. It is attributed to Athena, who, upon discovering that while playing the flute her face became unrecognisable and unattractive, flung the flute away.⁶⁰ The rejection of the instrument by both the patron goddess of Athens, and later Alcibiades, established its place as an object to be derided. With regard to the long-standing rivalries of the two cities, it is not surprising that Athenians decided that an instrument that deformed and silenced the Thebans when they played it was eminently suitable. This is very much a case of the 'Boeotian pig', the stereotypical dismissal of Thebes and Boeotia as an inferior area to that of Athens and Attica.

⁶⁰ Demand, 1982: 89.

Whilst Thebes was later accredited with the flute and mastery of it, it was the lyre that was closely associated with the foundation legends of the city. As Alcibiades commented, 'the lyre wrought no havoc with the bearing and appearance... Moreover, the lyre blended its tones with the voice and song of its master'.⁶¹ The idea that it was simply an accompaniment to the human voice is present in Greek literature from Homer onwards.⁶² There are examples in the Odyssey of a bard with a lyre singing of the warriors of Troy and the heroic past.⁶³ The apparent relationship between heroes and lyres implies that it was considered noble on the basis of these associations. Of the depictions of lyres on Kabeiric vases two are shown in scenes connected with the tales of a heroic past (judgment of Paris), the others are of processions and symposia. The placement of lyres into these non-mythological situations strongly implies that music accompanied by song was a feature of the Kabeiric cult.

The final type appearing on Kabeiric vases is the tympanon, a percussion instrument that seems to resemble a small drum or tambourine. In the iconographic representations of tympana they are shown being struck by hand in different ways.⁶⁴ Most of the references link them closely with the cults of Dionysos-Bacchus and the Great Mother.⁶⁵ The strong partnership of Dionysos and tympana suggest that the iconographic presence of this instrument at the Kabeirion is due to the adoption of Dionysian ideas and motifs.

Like music, dance held an 'integral part of the rituals' in Greek religious life.⁶⁶ The Dionysian elements of the Kabeiric cult are prominent here. Dionysiac scenes of dancers often include silens, satyrs, nymphs, maenads and komasts, all of which appear on Kabeiric vases with some regularity.⁶⁷ These dancing characterisations can range from 'orgiastic or ecstatic, unruly or drunken, to practised and seemingly more formal solo or group routines'.⁶⁸

The concept that dances could be divided into categories, namely formal and informal, is not a new idea. In Plato's Laws, there is a discussion regarding the dances of Athens and what is and is not appropriate.⁶⁹ The diagram (Figure 6.14) shows Plato's distinctions in dance types. When considering the Kabeirion with its strong Dionysiac connections, and the prejudices of the Athenians against Thebes, it is not unusual that the Kabeiric dances end up in the unsuitable categories.

The idea that the Kabeiric dances were ignoble and unsuitable by Athenian standards can be observed in the story of Hippokleides. When Hippokleides won the hand of Agariste in marriage he danced on a table in celebration, and in the process, danced away his chance to marry.⁷¹ The dance in question, according to Herodotus, followed on from those of Sparta and Athens.⁷² A. Cook believes this dance to be a Theban one on the basis that after Sparta and Athens, Thebes is the natural contender for third place.⁷³ The routine involved Hippokleides placing his head on the table and waving his legs in the air,⁷⁴ and there is one example on a fragment by the Kabir Painter from the sanctuary (Cat. No.126, Pl.33a), which dates to the early fourth century BC. This piece shows a figure with his back towards a small table upon which he rests his hands, his body is arched and his legs appear to be lifted from the ground. The figure seems to be in mid-somersault and has been used as an alternative to A. Cook's dance interpretation.⁷⁵ In view of the body's pose (Figure 6.15), it would not be possible to perform in such a manner without causing bodily harm. The figure therefore could be an acrobat somersaulting rather than representing a particular Theban dance.

In 1945 an article by Lawler and Kober put forward the idea that the colabrismos, a komos, sword or pig dance of Thracian origin was performed at Kabeiric sanctuaries.⁷⁷ They based their argument on the Kabeiric vases and other evidence presented in reports published in 1890.⁷⁸ These two articles discussed the terracotta and metal finds discovered in the first excavations in the nineteenth century, and the first point made is that over 200 terracotta swine were found.⁷⁹

This is correct, although they are only mentioned in this article.⁸⁰ The other piece of evidence is claimed to represent the performance of the Thracian pig dance, namely the appearance of characters with pig masks on the Kabeiric vases themselves. They also imply that there are a number of vases with these images, but there are in fact only two showing humanoid figures with pig features. In both instances these pig-like humans are accompanied by images of Odysseus and Circe. These figures are not performing a Thracian pig dance but rather they are the transformed crew of Odysseus. Cat. No.243 shows on one side Odysseus and Circe, and on the other a group of men with swine features. It is presumably this vase that Lawler and Kober considered. More recent explanations identify this group as a chorus, and that the vase is showing a theatrical performance rather than a dance.⁸¹ A chorus, dressed as swine, would be an easy way of depicting the transformation of Odysseus's crew. The other representation is on Cat. No.124; this has a single pig-human who is squatting to one side of the scene, but he can hardly be considered to be dancing. Whilst it is claimed that other evidence exists for 'pig dances' in the Mediterranean,⁸² Lawler and Kober's theory that these took place at the Kabeirion cannot be regarded as viable.

6.5.3 Symposia

A. Symposium, Single Figure

A single male reclining on a couch (Figure 6.16, p.263). They are normally depicted as a bearded figure with a drinking vessel (kantharos, drinking horn or rhyton) in their right hand. Their torso is bare with himation covering the lower body. This figure is usually to the right of the scene, and other figures (human or animal) and objects are arrayed to the left. The reclining figure is usually identified as Kabeiros.⁸³ Above and flanking the scene are vines from which hang bunches of grapes.

B. Symposium, Group Scene

In the group symposium scenes (Figure 6.17), a number of males recline on couches. Their torsos are bare, with himatia covering their lower bodies. Tables and other objects can also be placed in front of the couch. The normal layout is that of the couches being arranged either side of a central entertainment, invariably dancer(s) and/or flute player(s). Above and flanking the scene are vines from which hang bunches of grapes.

⁸⁴ Wolters and Bruns, 1940: 97 K3, Pl.8.1; Braun and Haevernick, 1981: 63 No.305.

Alcohol played a significant role in Greek religion: the vast quantities of pottery associated with the practice bear testament. The Theban cult is no exception and this is supported by both the archaeological and iconographic evidence. The symposium was an all-male gathering with wine, and women (with the exception of female servants and entertainers) were excluded. A common misconception is its association with feasting and although performed in the same space, symposia generally occurred after a meal.⁸⁶ Many of the iconographic depictions show groups of men, in various states of intoxication, reclining on couches and occasionally watching entertainments (see Figure 6.17, p.263). Although all the vase scenes from the site show men reclining, the architectural evidence indicates that the dining structures had upright seating positions (see Figure 3.20 (p.127) for a possible reconstruction).⁸⁷ If the vases are indeed meant to represent actual activities at the sanctuary, then we must suspect one of two situations. Firstly, that symposia took place in other structures (perhaps the rectangular buildings), or secondly that the artists chose to represent the symposia in a form more recognisable to the consumer. When considering the architecture and the seating arrangements from the site, the latter option (representation of symposia following normal conventions) seems more plausible, and the connection between libation and symposia also upholds this theory.⁸⁸ On the floor of one of the round dining structures was a sunken lekane with a dedicatory inscription into which libations were poured.⁸⁹

Considering the strong Dionysian influence on the cult it is not totally unknown for some of the alcoholic attributes of this deity to be found at the sanctuary. The grapevine as a metaphor for the cycle of death and renewal transcended its

Much can be said on the role of games or agones in religious contexts. In the case of the Kabeirion at Thebes there are some important issues to discuss. The extant sanctuary shows no signs of any sports facilities and yet there are a significant number of vases (many painted by local artists specifically for the site) with athletic scenes. Whilst games such as boxing or wrestling could have been carried out in the stage area of the cavea, running events would have required as a minimum an appropriate length of flat ground. Looking at the topographical context of the site, its placement within a natural basin surrounded by low hills would indicate that a running track might not have been a feasible option as a feature of the complex. We must assume, therefore, that if athletics did form part of the cult's activities they did not take place within the sanctuary itself. The landscape is mainly hilly, but on leaving the site following the modern track, which runs parallel to the ancient entrance, one is faced with the expanse of the Theban plain. It is possible that there was a suitable space for athletics in the hills surrounding the sanctuary, and a satellite image clearly shows some ploughed fields in the vicinity of the site (Figure

The hills are shown in buff and are predominantly covered in trees; the green areas to the north belong to the Theban plain. The modern track to the sanctuary from the north roughly parallels the ancient entrance.

6.5.6 Hunting

A. Fox

Here, a single male figure follows a hound, with both pursuing the quarry. The figure can be armed and is usually nude though he may have a chlamys over one arm. The figure may also have a head ornament shaped like a pair of cattle horns. Above the scene are vines and bunches of grapes.

B. Hare

Single male, on foot or horseback, is accompanied by a hound pursuing the hare. The male can be armed and is either nude or with a chlamys over one arm. The figure may also have a head ornament shaped like a pair of cattle horns. Above the scene are vines and bunches of grapes.

C. Deer

In these scenes, male figure(s) sometimes on horseback, in pursuit of a deer, may be aided by a hound. They are usually armed with a club, spear or bow. The deer sometimes has antlers, though the usual image is of an animal without. This is the only hunting scene where there can be more than one hunter (Figure 6.24).

E. Hunter and Hound

1. Hound with Hunter: Scenes seem to be one of power. Hunter is usually trying to dominate the hound, although this is shown with varying success.
2. Hound waiting obediently at hunter's side.
3. Hound pulling on leash, dragging hunter behind him.
4. Hunter directing spear towards hound who appears to be in the process of attacking him (Figure 6.26).
5. Hound: running. Presumed that these fragments showing a lone hound belong to the types of hunting identified above.

This hunting group incorporating hounds all seem to clearly represent one distinct breed. Based upon Hull's description of the various ancient breeds, the Lakonian hound best fits the type.⁹⁹

This raises the question of how hunting fits into the ancient cult. It is more closely linked with Artemis¹⁰¹ than with a group of deities resembling the Kabeiroi. In addition, a cult which includes hunting as part of its ritual activities is not known. If the Kabeirion has such a ceremony then it is possibly unique. Instead it might be reasonably proposed that the hunting-associated vases could perhaps represent dedications offered for the protection of the hunter.

6.5.7 Dramatic Performances and Mythology

A. Battle of the Pygmies and the Cranes¹⁰²

Male figures, either nude with chlamys or robed, are shown pursuing or attacking the cranes. They can be hunting bare-handed or with a spear or net. Occasionally one of the hunters is on horseback. The cranes are normally shown attacking the pygmies (Figure 6.27).¹⁰³

C. The Odyssey and Related Myths

The Grotesque and the Stage: A Case Study from Homer's Odyssey

When we consider the great figures from Homer's epics we have very clear ideas of how we expect them to appear. The grotesque representations common to

¹¹⁷ Gantz, 1993: 705; Touchefou-Meynier, 1992: 964-965.

¹¹⁸ There is no record of Odysseus being chased by an ogress during his travels, it is possible that the story simply refers to an anonymous traveller, (rather than Odysseus) being waylaid by a monster. The pointed hat which the figure wears is undoubtedly a characteristic of the depictions of Odysseus.

Kabeiric Ware challenge these preconceptions. There is no way we can describe the figures from these vases as the heroic ideal. In approaching this material we need to understand what grotesque actually means. Richter outlines the key characteristics for grotesque males, and this description, although incomplete in listing all the features, provides a useful introduction to this artistic style.¹¹⁹

The main characteristics of the grotesque figures, reviewing them as a whole, are the following: they invariably show bodily deformities, such as a hunch, a protruding paunch, crooked legs, and exaggerated features, and they all have one distinguishing mark, a large phallus. Baldness is common, and it is noticeable that many of them have a decidedly moody expression.¹²⁰

Whilst the above extract would certainly apply to those individuals on the Kabeiric vases who are male, what of the female? For them the main characteristics remain the same, with the portrayal of over-exaggerated facial features. Images of women on these vases frequently exhibit them in an unflattering light, making them simply an object of derision. Obesity is a common way of making a female character grotesque.¹²¹ The representations of Circe sometimes give her an impressive girth which contradicts the audience's preconceived notion of how a goddess should be regarded. Circe might be a goddess and a temptress but this is immaterial in relation to these images. The great Greek hero, Odysseus, is shown as grotesque and is typically depicted on Kabeiric vases with balding head, pot-belly, spindly legs and an impressively caricatured expression – not really in keeping with the description presented by Homer's Odyssey when Athena glorifies his appearance.¹²² The representation of characters with a grotesque or caricatured appearance seems to be a major theme in the decoration choices of Kabeiric Ware. A question we must ask, though not necessarily be able to answer, is why so many of these vases feature scenes painted in such a manner? The consensus of opinion is that these depictions are illustrating theatrical performances, and that the deformed characters are actually wearing masks and costumes.¹²³ This supports the unusual portrayals of Circe, as women were not allowed upon the stage,¹²⁴ and male actors would have worn padding to emulate the female figure.¹²⁵ Much work has been carried out on the use of masks in the ancient world, from theatrical works to funerary rituals. A particularly interesting study conducted by Webster looked at the iconographic types on vases, bronzes, terracottas and other media, and a catalogue was devised of facial expressions or masks.¹²⁶ This catalogue consisted of characters recognisable from Greek drama, tragedy and comedy. Webster's study included examples of Kabeiric Ware, some of which have been placed in this study under the category of mythology and dramatic performance. Webster's study can be expanded and the following table (Table 6.1) summarises those vases which have been documented in Braun and Haevernick,¹²⁷ Webster¹²⁸ and Bedigan.¹²⁹

¹²⁵ Taplin, 1993: 35. One character who is over-padded regularly on the Kabeiric vases is Circe. A recent study has suggested that padded figures in Greek art do not represent 'real' people, instead these characters are from myth, hence their frequent inclusion in narrative scenes (Green, 2007: 98); a theory which is supported by the evidence from the Kabeirion.

The primary conclusion to be drawn from these observations strongly suggests that theatrical performances were being enacted at the Kabeirion. The lack of other supporting data on the vases, namely the omission of props and scenery from the vast majority of them, is disappointing. Cat. No.243 with its chorus is an interesting example of stage features transferring to iconography. Likewise with Cat. No.79 (Pl.19c), the mask of Boreas would be an easy subject to fit into a stage performance.

D. Cadmos and the Snake¹³¹

Cadmos is to the left of the scene near a tree; he is jumping back in fright and appears to be falling over backwards at the sight of the snake that is rearing up its head from the bushes to the right. Only the head and upper part of the snake's body is visible (Figure 6.30, p.278).¹³²

2. With Omphale and King Iardanos:¹⁴⁰ Heracles is standing to the left in a robe, three branches on his head; he is looking away from the female (Omphale) next to him who is grasping him by the arm. Omphale is also robed and her hair is bound up in a headband. In her left hand is a small branch with a fillet tied to it, and what appears to be an aryballos hangs from her wrist. To the right is a male bearded figure, again robed and with three branches as a headdress, holding out a hand to Omphale. This figure has been interpreted as either King Iardanos or a priest.¹⁴¹
3. With Atlas:¹⁴² a bearded male figure supports the world above his head, looking back over his shoulder to another male figure who is nude, with a cord in his right hand.¹⁴³
4. With an Amazon:¹⁴⁴ Heracles, robed in the lion skin, holds a club above his head ready to strike a fallen Amazon who is trying to defend herself with a shield.¹⁴⁵
5. With Ares, Athena and Cycnos:¹⁴⁶ Running clockwise around the vessel: Ares on horseback with helmet and spear, Cycnos with chlamys and spear, Heracles, nude with bow and club, and Athena in flowing dress and helmet with spear and twig. Cycnos and Heracles face one another about to fight

¹³⁷ The vases said to have depictions of Heracles deserve further consideration. Some may not represent the demi-god and instead, belong to other categories. The vase described as Heracles with the Stymphalian birds may be better listed as pygmy and crane scene.

Acheloüs stands to his right holding onto one of Heracles' hands. Acheloüs is shown robed and bent over leaning on a staff, with a headdress shaped like a pair of cattle horns. 6.5.8 The Negroid: Ethnic Awareness and Artistic Popularity

Their (Negroes') ugliness seems to have appealed alike to sculptor, engraver, and painter, and their prophylactic quality to the populace throughout the Mediterranean.¹⁶⁰

Among the vases from the Kabeirion are a number that show individuals with strong Negroid features. There are a large number of ancient sources that refer to the Negro and describe the physical characteristics of this race, which appears to have held some considerable appeal to the ancient artist. References to skin, hair and facial features support the view that the authors are indeed describing what we would classify today as 'Negroid'.¹⁶¹ A description of an Ethiopian (Αἰθίοψ - Aithiops), the term used by the Greeks to describe those of African descent, suggests that the authors were familiar with the physical traits of the Negro. Tightly curled or 'woolly' hair, flat nose, protruding lips and dark skin were seen to distinguish Negroid individuals from their Greek counterparts; awareness of which is apparent in the ancient authors, including Diodorus.¹⁶² Work by Snowden

Xenophanes	Fragments	6 th Century BC	Black Skin, Flat Nose

The main features mentioned are the ‘woolly hair’ and the skin tone, either ‘black skin’ or ‘black or dark skin’. None of the extant texts refer to the ‘thick lips’ associated with the Negro, yet their presence in art clearly indicates that there was an awareness of this feature.

On vases from the Kabeirion, Circe is often shown as a Negress, which must have been a conscious decision on the part of the vase painter or the individual who commissioned the work. Circe is not the only character to be shown with Negroid features; there is a significant number of vases following this artistic trend. The scene shown on Kabeiric vases is where Circe offers Odysseus the potion that has earlier turned all his men into swine. She is at this point deliberately portrayed in a negative light, and Homer speaks of the ‘evil purpose in her heart’.¹⁶⁶ Although depicted in this manner, Beardsley points out that there is no apparent reason for her to be perceived in this way.¹⁶⁷ Some individuals in Greek mythology are known to have Negroid ancestry, one such example being Lamia.¹⁶⁸ She was a daughter in the Royal House of Libya who was loved by Zeus. Out of jealousy Hera caused her to eat her own children, then turned her into a monstrous creature who lived by devouring the children of others.¹⁶⁹ The satyr comedies often portray her as an evil daimon of Negroid appearance who was tortured by the satyrs.¹⁷⁰ Circe has no such ancestry, and so the depiction of her with these traits on Kabeiric vases is a case of the 'intentionally grotesque',¹⁷¹ even if it is reflecting a racial type.

It has been proposed that the decision to show individuals of different ethnic backgrounds was an opportunity to demonstrate the 'superiority of Greek civilisation and intellectual know-how over non-Greek ugliness and stupidity'.¹⁷² This argument could be applied to the depiction of the Circe myth on Kabeiric vases. It is the cunning and intelligence of Odysseus, the Greek hero (not to mention the aid of the Greek gods), which triumphs over the sorcery of Circe who is clearly represented in this story as being outside the boundaries of the Greek world. She questions Odysseus when he threatens her, 'Who are you among me, and from where? Where is your city, and your parents?'¹⁷³ Garland also refers to the predominance of female monsters in Greek mythology; 'the Gorgons, the Moirai, the Harpies, the Erinyes, the Sirens, the Graiai, Medusa, and the Sphinx, Scylla and Charybdis'.¹⁷⁴ The majority of these characters are depicted in both literature and art as something definitely 'other' and so setting them apart from the Greek ideal. It is possible that the decision, on the part of the vase painter, to show Circe in such a fashion, is a deliberate attempt to demonstrate to the viewer that Circe belongs in this category.

It should also be noted that those from Negroid or Ethiopian stock had a long association with the theatre. Snowden writes that the Negro was a familiar character on the stage, acting in many of the plays.¹⁷⁵ Snowden cites various plays with examples of Ethiopian characters, notably the Memnon or Aithiopes of Sophocles, the Memnon of Aeschylus, which he suggests may have had an Ethiopian chorus and the Andromeda of Euripides.¹⁷⁶ In addition there are references to possible satyr plays with Negroes, and Snowden alludes to the aforementioned Lamia who is shown on a fifth century Attic lekythos in Negro guise being tortured by satyrs.

The motivation for portraying individuals on the Kabeiric vases with Negroid characteristics is uncertain. Some scholars have commented that Herodotus referred to the fact that the Kabeiroi themselves were represented as pygmies,¹⁷⁷ suggesting that the depictions of the deities would also have had strong Negroid tendencies. If one considers the vases from the site at Thebes, this assertion does not seem to bear scrutiny. On the vases showing Kabeiros and Pais, none has displayed the deities with looks that are of a non-Greek origin. The only vase with Kabeiros in a caricatured manner is the so-called 'Koes Kantharos' in the Ure Museum at Reading, and even then the image could not be described as being of Negroid appearance.¹⁷⁸ Curiously other deities from the Greek Pantheon are also presented with these traits, with both Aphrodite and Hera being cited as examples by Snowden.¹⁷⁹

Although the deities are not actually represented as Herodotus and Blakely would propose, there are a significant number of vases with such images. Indeed, Herodotus' descriptions of the statues in Egypt strongly resemble the pygmies depicted on the Kabeiric vases.¹⁸⁰ These scenes, which are usually those relating to the hunting of birds, appear to have a strong connection with the battle between the pygmies and the cranes.¹⁸¹ The pygmies are identified as an agricultural race who are forced, when their seed is destroyed, to defend themselves against the cranes who despise them because of their stature.¹⁸² The usual outcome is the victory of the cranes over the pygmies. On Attic vases they are normally depicted with balding heads, pot-bellies, pathetic beards and outsize genitals.¹⁸³ Their portrayal on ceramics at the Kabeirion tends to follow this same pattern. This grotesque version of the pygmy seems to emerge in the fourth century BC,¹⁸⁴ and it is to this group that the majority of the Kabeiric vases belong, although some characterisations are more flattering and not as comical. The distinguishing features such as curly hair, flattened noses and prominent chins all indicate a Negroid origin,¹⁸⁵ and the marshes of the Nile Delta have been put forward as a location by the ancient authors.¹⁸⁶ Some scholars take the viewpoint that the pygmy obviously belongs to the 'others', those who are clearly non-Greek and that this, therefore, means they are uncivilised.¹⁸⁷ Hoffman's study on Attic representations of them by the vase painter Sotades draws attention to this idea: 'Like satyrs, pygmies do and are the very opposite of heroes and civilised Athenians'.¹⁸⁸

¹⁷⁷ Hdt., 3.37; Blakely, 2006: 32, 54. Blakely argues that the Kabeiroi were pygmies, and states that the Theban vases support Herodotus' comments on the Kabeiroi of Memphis. There is no evidence from other Kabeiric sites to suggest that this was the case.

There does seem to be an emphasis on racial contrast, especially in terms of skin colour and facial features.¹⁸⁹ Various plastic vases from the sanctuary are double-headed, normally with a female head paired with that of a satyr, but there is also an example with a Negroid head coupled with that of a Greek woman.¹⁹⁰ Beardsley attests that the introduction of the rather archaic-looking female Greek was there simply to enhance the character and spirit displayed in the Negroid face.¹⁹¹ Vase scenes also underline these contrasts and providing a useful example is one interpreted as being an illustration of the Orphic myth relating to the birth of mankind. In this portrayal, in which the individuals are helpfully labelled, we see Mitos, Krateia and Pratolaos positioned in front of the standing figure of Pais and Kabeiros who is shown reclining on a couch (Cat. No.120, Pl.32c, National Archaeological Museum, Athens). Both Mitos and Pratolaos are depicted with attributes typical of Greek representations of Negroes. The flat noses, thick lips and short curly hair all bear similarities to other Negro scenes within Greek vase painting.¹⁹² Snowden interprets this as a case of the artist deliberately intending to contrast the racial types.¹⁹³

There is some literary evidence to support the theory that there was a lack of colour prejudice in antiquity, leading Snowden to intimate that it was 'natural bent, not race, that determines nobility'.¹⁹⁴ Diodorus, Lucian and Ptolemy all refer to the Negro or the Ethiopian in a fairly complimentary way. Diodorus speaks of their worship of the gods and their piety.¹⁹⁵ Lucian describes them as the wisest of all men, whereas Ptolemy explains their savagery as a side effect of the heat in which they live.¹⁹⁶ However, the representations on Kabeiric vases appear to make the Negro an object of derision and they are frequently displayed in parodies of the past. The images of Circe as a Negress in a satire of the famous scene from the Odyssey would support this view. Even Garland's description of Cretinism bears a striking resemblance to that of the Negro, 'lopsided facial features, gaping jaws, enlarged ears, fleshy protruding lips' all point to a certain overlap of characteristics between grotesque and Negroid.¹⁹⁷

6.6 Dionysos: The Adoption of an Iconographic Style

When considering Dionysos as an artistic device it is important to understand that his popularity as an image varied regionally. From the Attic corpus we see a vast range of vases with Dionysos, more than any other deity.¹⁹⁸ Yet in his birthplace of Boeotia he is not a common subject.¹⁹⁹ The figure of Dionysos is easily identifiable and although his initial appearance, that of a bearded figure with long hair and robes, fits most of the male deities on Olympus, Dionysos is still recognisable

Dionysos' followers would seem to be the main focal point of the Kabeiric Ware. Satyrs, silens, nymphs and maenads all appear with great frequency on the ceramics. Differentiation can be made between satyrs and silens, nymphs and maenads. Firstly, Silenos was an individual satyr, but by the middle of the fourth century silens and satyrs could be used interchangeably as a description for the horse-human hybrids.²⁰³ Nymphs were the original companions of satyrs on Greek vases and their connection with Dionysos probably stems from this relationship.²⁰⁴ While nymphs are semi-divine, maenads are fully human, and the term is used to identify the 'crazed female followers' of Dionysos.²⁰⁵ Euripides' Bacchae provides the best descriptions of these demonised females.²⁰⁶ The semi-divine, proper followers of Dionysos remain unchanged within the Bacchae, but the women of Thebes are driven mad by the god and become maenads.²⁰⁷ The objects carried by Dionysos and his companions are all strongly related to his role as the god of wine. Drinking vessels and grapevines are strong iconographic trends. Similarly the thyrsus and/or sprigs or wreaths of ivy are carried or worn. Other Dionysian symbols on Kabeiric Ware vases are the donkey, the snake and the goat.²⁰⁸

The lack of images of Dionysos in comparison with the large number of his companions is not unexpected. As the iconography of Dionysos was adopted for use with another deity, Kabeiros, the majority of vases with this type of figure should be identified as Kabeiros rather than Dionysos (Figure 6.37, p.293). If we see a complete adoption of Dionysian imagery, the companions should remain the same but Dionysos will be transformed into Kabeiros. The figure of Pais bears strong similarities to the beardless, youthful versions of Dionysos, again implying that the iconographic standards of Dionysian art were being followed.

6.7 Summary

If we accept Schachter's general categories, the vase scenes tell us a great deal about aspects of initiation and activity at the sanctuary. Schachter summarises some of the key characteristics which feature on the Kabeiric vases.²¹¹ These are listed below and are indicated by (*) at the end of the entry. If we follow Schachter's conventions additional observations can be made. These have been ordered in the same manner as the iconographic descriptions so they provide a chronological sequence of event-based findings.

6.7.1 Stage One: Arrival at the Sanctuary and Preliminary Events

1. Those arriving for initiation were part of a procession (*).
2. They appear to be accompanied by musicians (Schachter noted that arrival was by procession, although he omitted to add that these processions were also accompanied by musicians).
3. Those participating in the processions frequently carried torches indicating that the activities took place at night. (Schachter only refers to torches during the initiation preparation).
4. Items required especially for the celebrations were brought in. Those documented on the vases seem to involve the provision of wine amphorae.

²¹⁰ Wolters and Bruns, 1940: 96 K1, Pl.5, 44.1; Braun and Haevernick, 1981: 62 No.302, Pl.22.1-2.

²¹¹ Schachter, 1986: 101-102.

5. The sanctuary was open to men and women and possibly slaves and children too (*).
6. Bull sacrifices were made to Herms (*). (Schachter noted preliminary sacrifices; no mention is made of the fact that these were to be exclusively offered to a Herm).
7. Offerings and other votives were brought to the site and presented at altars or to Herms.

6.7.2 Stage Two: Preparation for Initiation

8. Those to be initiated wore headbands, branches or wreaths (or a combination of the three) upon their heads (*).
9. Prior to initiation the initiate was covered with a mantle from head to toe ensuring that the head was concealed (*).
10. Officials, mystagogues and rhabdophoroi were involved in the initiation and other activities at the sanctuary (*).
11. The officials could be male or female (*).
12. Torches are carried in a large number of the preliminary initiation scenes denoting again that the initiation (as well as the procession) took place at night (*).
13. The presence of trees and rocks on some vase scenes would indicate that initiation took place outside (*).

6.7.3 Stage Three: The Panegyris

14. Those initiated were involved in entertainment activities following the ceremonies (*).
15. The initiated continued to wear headbands, branches and wreaths following the event (*).
16. Entertainment activities could take place inside or outside (*). (Schachter refers to dining activities taking place indoors).
17. Ritual feasting and drinking were an important part in the activities following initiation.

18. The ritual feasting and drinking depicted as symposium-like scenes only have male participants.
19. A number of myths and legends were performed at the sanctuary suggesting a theatrical element to the cult activities.
20. Athletic events were held and winners presented with prizes; again this seems to be male-exclusive.
21. Dancing which involved both men and women.
22. Activities after initiation had a socialising aspect with conversations or discussions amongst the participants.
23. Hunting of a variety of animals, again male-only.

If we take these at face value the observations provide a wealth of information regarding the activities of a mystery cult. Unfortunately due to the nature of mysteries we cannot discern what the initiation into it involved. There are additional problems with this type of analysis. It is proposed that whilst the findings relating to the first two stages of initiation seem logical, the subsequent events should be scrutinised more carefully. Problems can be indicated in relation to the performance of myths, athletics and hunting. The range of mythological tales shown on the vases is one of major concern as not all of these stories would be suitable for presentation on a stage. Athletics, which have been discussed previously, have certain requirements, and hunting is not commonly seen as a ritual. Whilst Schachter's categories offer a good framework for understanding the iconography of the sanctuary, there are major problems with stage three which need to be resolved. For the sake of clarity, stage three could be divided into the following sub-categories.

Stage Three: The Panegyris and other events/iconographic themes:

1. Dancing.
2. Symposia.
3. Conversation.
4. Athletics.

This is dependent on the location of the appropriate facilities, although this would necessitate activities taking place outside of the sanctuary.

5. Dramatic performance and mythology.

Divided into two sub-categories:

- A. Those suitable for stage production.
- B. Those used purely for iconographical purposes.

6. Hunting.

Used as an iconographical theme purely for dedication purposes or because of its popularity as a subject matter.

Chapter Seven

The Hellenistic and Roman Periods: 275 BC-425 AD

7.1 Introduction

Whilst the focus of this study is firmly placed upon the period of Kabeiric ware production, c.450-275 BC, it is important to our knowledge of the sanctuary to understand its development after the disappearance of the Kabeiric Ware ceramics. This spread of Classical-style pottery into the traditional Hellenistic period also corresponds with the data from Corinth, which suggests a later dating (or down-dating) for certain types of ceramics. From analysis regarding usage of the ceramics during the Classical period it is clear that Kabeiric Ware represented a significant change to the normal pottery consumption at the site. Therefore understanding if Kabeiric ceramics represent an anomaly, or whether they retain a similar 'background' level of use throughout the site's lifespan, is important. By considering the Hellenistic and Roman periods it is possible, when also taking the Archaic and earlier phases into account, to provide material evidence for the ceramic conventions at this sanctuary.

7.2 The Post-Kabeiric Ware Hellenistic Period: 275-50 BC

The Hellenistic period is traditionally associated with the rise of Macedonia as the predominant power in the eastern Mediterranean.¹ The dissolution of the Boeotian League at the end of Period VI (c.171 BC) and the eventual conquest of Greece by the Romans in 146-145 BC clearly marks a change in Greek fortunes.² Although Greece does not become a formally-organised Roman province (Achaëa) until the time of the emperor Augustus, for the Romans not to have been a major influence on the Greek world would have been surprising.³ This change of fortunes is clearly represented by Thebes which was destroyed when the Romans first take control of the mainland in 146-145 BC.⁴

7.2.1 The Down-dating of the Hellenistic Period

The so-called down-dating of selected period ceramics in the Mediterranean is not a new idea. Edwards, in his volume on the Hellenistic ceramics of the south stoa at the Corinthian excavations, raised the possibility that the dates given to the pottery would require revision.⁵ The original dating for the south stoa at Corinth put it in use c.330-146 BC.⁶ More recent work has suggested that the stoa actually dates after 300 BC.⁷ The down-dating of material is not only limited to Corinth. Work at Olynthus, the Athenian Agora and even Libya all strongly point to a revision of the dating of the ceramics.⁸ By moving Hellenistic pottery to later dates it indicates that Classical styles remained in use. Kabeiric Ware is typically described as a fourth century ceramic type, with its demise around the close of the same century. Many scholars refer to the beginning of Kabeiric Ware but fail to fully identify the end of the series.⁹ The review of the ceramics presented here would confirm that Kabeiric Ware continued over a longer period than previously considered. Rather than ending at the closing stages of the fourth century the series remained in use until the mid third century BC, about 50-75 years longer than the usual approximations. The evidence that Classical pottery types were still in use would fully support the concept that many, though not necessarily all, Hellenistic styles can be down-dated.

⁹ Schachter, 1986: 99-125. Schachter refers to the beginning of Kabeiric Ware during his Period 3 (c.450/25 to 382 BC). No end date is given, although his references to Kabeiric Ware cease by his Period 5 (c.315 to c.275 BC).

7.3 Period VI: 275-170 BC

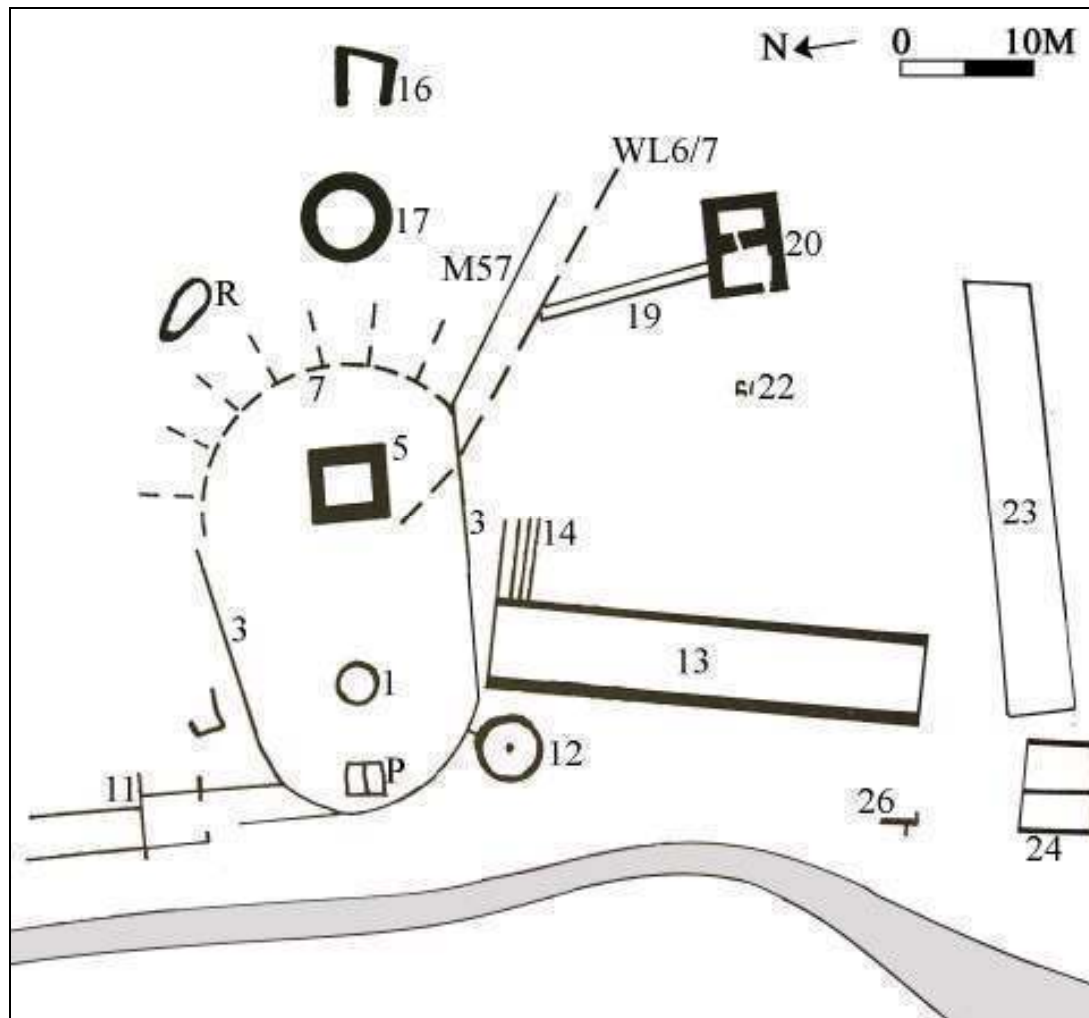

Figure 7.1: Period VI, after Schachter, 1986, revised. Features: Rock R; Tholoi 1, 12, 17; Pits P; Aqueduct 19; Water Conduits WL6, WL7; Cavea 7; Reservoirs 20, 24; Niche 16; Podium 5; Walls 3, M57; Entrance 11; Stairs 14; Well 22; Hellenistic Buildings 26; Stoas 13, 23.

The building works of the Kabeirion reach a higher level during Period VI on a far greater scale than previously seen. It could be stated that this phase represents the monumentalising of the site, and it has been said that it is only in the third century that the site becomes a sanctuary in manner of appearance.¹⁰ The term monumentalisation is more frequently used in reference to the grand building schemes of Athens and Corinth. When used in regard to the Kabeirion it is really monumentalisation on a Theban level. It is only in comparison to the sanctuary's earlier phases that this one in particular can be referred to as monumental. The change in focus is also represented by the emphasis placed on the cavea, frequently described in some publications as a theatre.¹¹ This implies that the focus of the site had swung away from the rock formation to the north of the complex and instead was firmly placed on productions or initiations occurring within this gathering area (see Figure 7.2a-b).¹² Schachter points out that it was during this phase that the earlier north-east/south-west alignment of the sanctuary was completely altered to an east-west axis.¹³ The construction of a large retaining wall M57 to support the cavea and the construction of a second retaining wall 3, which in effect separated the central area from the rest of the site, supports this hypothesis.¹⁴

Within the area separated by the new retaining wall 3, a central structure was erected. This building was a tholos and probably constructed on a similar design plan to that of the dining tholoi of the earlier phases of the sanctuary.¹⁵ This continued importance of the tholos to the Kabeiric site means that there was some continuation of tradition at the sanctuary. The placement of the tholos as the central focus of the cult rather than the rock and cavea, would perhaps imply that the earlier traditions associated with these features were of reduced importance. The sacrificial pits P also within this section appear to have been rebuilt.¹⁶ The addition of a podium 5 in the orchestra area of the cavea¹⁷ could be used to rule out the possibility that the cavea was designed for theatrical purposes.¹⁸ A new entrance 11 in the north-western corner channelled access into the site, and this appears to lead directly to the central area defined by the retaining wall 3.¹⁹ This new entrance corresponds directly with the topographic observations discussed in Chapter 4 and suggests that the entrance to the site was consistently in one location.

The water system was also revised with conduits WL6/7 replacing WL16/17; these ran parallel with M57 and resulted in the destruction of tholoi 18 and 28.²⁰ A second reservoir 24 at the western side of the site was also constructed.²¹

At the eastern side of the sanctuary a niche 16 was added,²² and also replaced within this period.²³ The site was extended to the south with a stoa 23 which elongated the boundaries of the Kabeirion and doubled the size of the complex.²⁴ The addition slightly later of a western stoa 13 similarly opened up the site in that direction. Another building 26 was added to the south-western corner,²⁵ and a stairway 14 linked the southern area with the main body of the sanctuary.²⁶

7.3.2 Find Contexts

Curiously Period VI is the last phase from which find contexts are provided for any of the ceramics. There does not seem to be any explanation for this, and because of the lack of find contexts for the vast majority of the ceramics from the sanctuary this is not particularly unexpected. Less than 300 objects from a total of 2,197, for all periods, (some admittedly with multiple fragments) are provided with definite known provenances from within the site.²⁷ From the available evidence for Period VI, the only observation that can be made with any certainty is that most of the fragments come from contexts closely associated with the structures from the Classical period. None are found in connection with the buildings erected during Period VI. It is possible that, as many of the Classical structures were removed, these objects were connected to foundation deposits or from losses during building works but this seems unlikely as there is no correspondence to corroborate this idea.

7.3.3 Ceramic Usage

The first quarter century 275-250 BC is marked by the last vestiges of the Kabeiric Ware style and explains the presence of skyphoi in the archaeological record. After this quarter century, the skyphos completely disappears from the sanctuary. This clearly indicates that the skyphos was a typical Kabeiric vase shape and that with the end of the style there was no market for it in relation to sanctuary goods. In terms of other ceramic items there are only a few plates and Panathenaic amphorae but these unfortunately do not provide any definitive statements regarding activity at the site.

The other 75 years incorporated within this period show some increase in the numbers of objects used at the complex. Perhaps it is not surprising that the vessels still have strong associations with food and wine consumption, and by the end of the third century BC this increase is definitely more apparent. The remaining ceramics do not show any evidence of ritual activity except for drinking and the dedication of unguentaria. The first years of the second century BC see another increase in bowls and this peak in their usage corresponds with the levels of skyphoi utilised during the Kabeiric Ware phases. Other items remain negligible in the archaeological record with the popularity of unguentaria as dedication objects completely reversed. The form has disappeared from the archaeological record (apart from those examples loosely dated to some point in the second century BC).

The continuation of Kabeiric traditions associated with alcohol is clearly seen in the use of bowls, specifically the Hellenistic relief ware type. If these are used for the consumption of liquids, namely wine, then it is possible that they are the successors to skyphoi at the sanctuary. It is also conceivable that the rise of the bowl as a frequently used object at the site represents another evolutionary stage in its development.

7.4.2 Ceramic Usage

Period VII at the Kabeirion is one where the sanctuary is in decline in relation to its ceramic usage. The apparent lack of activity, visible in the architectural events of the site, is also clearly reflected in the ceramic material (Table 7.3, p.307). The presence of bowls during the second and third quarters of the second century BC continues the trend seen in Period VI. The only other examples of ceramics are plates and chytrai and these represent the possibility of a low level of continued food preparation at the complex. Marginal increases in pottery are seen in the next 25 years (150-125 BC), but because of the small quantities of pottery in the previous quarter a rise in numbers is not particularly difficult to explain. Admittedly the range of ceramics now includes fish plates, again suggestive of food consumption, and Panathenaic amphorae with the likelihood that these were dedicatory offerings. Bowls, and possibly unguentaria, continue to be the only item(s) whose examples reach double figures.

The evidence takes another downturn in the subsequent years. Any suggestion that the sanctuary saw continued feasting and drinking on a ritual scale is something that cannot be sustained. This situation is apparent for a number of years preceding this period. The large-scale ritual feasting and drinking which is confirmed by the ceramics in the late Archaic – early Hellenistic periods seems to be a thing of the past. What is obvious is that dedications are likewise undergoing a decline; unguentaria and other items which could be classified as offerings are scarce.

The problem of insufficient datable ceramics from the Kabeirion goes some way towards explaining this dramatic downturn in evidence. Out of 2,197 ceramics known from the sanctuary, nearly a third lack dates. If the majority of these undated pieces come from the phases when ceramics are apparently scarce, it would show a very different picture of the Kabeirion to the one presented here.

7.5 The Roman Period: 50 BC-425 AD

When taking into account the complications associated with the identification of exactly when the Roman period in Greece traditionally starts, it can be difficult to provide a definitive answer. For the purposes of this study the dates presented by Alcock are used.³¹ This places the commencement of the Roman period at c.30 BC, contemporary with the battle of Aktion and the establishment of Augustus as the premier power within the Roman world in c.31 BC.³² Curiously in terms of overall development at the sanctuary what we see is a glorification of the architectural elements of the site at the expense of artefacts.

7.6 Period VIII: 50 BC-150 AD

7.6.1 The Site

Following a period of recession in the mid first century AD there was a phase of recovery in its latter half.³³ Despite this recovery there is very little architectural activity at the site in this period (Figure 7.6). Both the anaktoron 1 and podium 5 undergo expansion work.³⁴ The cavea 6, (previously 7), is extended again and a boundary wall 15 is added into which a revised niche 16 has been incorporated.³⁵ The addition of a corridor 21 allowed access between the south stoa 23 and the upper levels of the cavea.³⁶ It might be suggested that the stoas have replaced the tholoi as dining spaces but there is, unfortunately, no associated debris that would support this hypothesis. The position of many of the structures signifies a controlled movement of patrons throughout the sanctuary, and perhaps provides a strong indication of the rituals performed at the site in Period VIII.

³⁶ Ibid, 86.

When looking at the architectural features of the cult it is possible to propose a clearly defined processional movement through the site (Figure 7.7). Participants entered from the north and would pass through the cavea area into the space enclosed by the stoas and the corridor. If initiates are being inducted into the cult using the same system visible on the iconography it is probable that they were prepared outside the sanctuary. This could possibly have occurred in the structures associated with the entrance, or perhaps in the small room attached to the theatre (Figure 7.7, A). They then progressed into the cavea for the preliminaries, presumably in view of the existing cult members or other initiates who would be sitting on the slopes of the theatre area (Figure 7.7, B). Following this first stage they would then move into the anaktoron 1 for the ceremony (Figure 7.7, C), and afterwards continued through into the area created by the corridor and stoas (Figure 7.7, D). On the basis of the iconographic evidence it is here that they would have participated in ritual feasting and drinking, and probably have been joined by the existing members who could have entered this area via the corridor. Once the dining was completed, the members, new and old alike could return to the cavea in order to observe performances, dances or other entertainment.

The control of movement through a sanctuary is not a new idea. The sanctuary of Demeter at Eleusis had a similar system of funnelling participants through the various stages. On the basis of the evidence presented by Mylonas, the initiates and others arriving at Eleusis remained outside the sanctuary and a day was spent on 'resting, fasting, purification, and sacrificing'.³⁷ As Mylonas so aptly states: 'Can one follow the anticipating pilgrims in their entry to the sacred enclosure?'³⁸ The preparations at Eleusis would link in with the initiation process indicated by Kabeiric Ware iconography and suggest that similar activities took place at the Theban centre.

On the basis of the extant archaeological remains at Eleusis we can identify a planned route through the sanctuary for participants. As discussed by Mylonas, the initial stage, the preparation for entry, took place in the outer court (Figure 7.8, A).

³⁹ Ibid, 11, fig.5, revised.

They would enter via the sacred way through the greater propylaea (Figure 7.8, B, p.311) and the lesser propylaea (Figure 7.8, C, p.311). The location of the Plutoneion to the right of the sacred way is connected to the natural rock formation and shallow cave found here, and the initiates may have watched a re-enactment of the return of Persephone (Figure 7.8, D, p.311).⁴⁰ They would then reach the Telesterion where presumably initiation or another ceremony took place (Figure 7.8, E, p.311).

7.6.2 Ceramic Usage

There is a slight increase in the quantities of ceramics found in comparison to the end of the previous phase. This slight rise cannot be dismissed as it shows a marginally wider variety of vessels being used at the site. The first quarter sees a renewed interest in the items connected with ritual feasting and drinking, an element supported by the possible predefined routes through the sanctuary (see Figure 7.7, p.310 and accompanying discussion). This trend is continued during the next 25 years, and interestingly there is also an increase in the wares associated with food preparation. The unguentaria also returns showing that dedications were once more in vogue. Nevertheless by the first and second quarters of the first century AD all the objects linked with food preparation and consumption have disappeared. What is left is a complete focus upon ceramics linked to alcohol from its storage to service and consumption.

Nevertheless the rituals involving the consumption of wine appear to continue. Although there is a significant downturn in 50-75 AD in all types of ceramics, a notable increase is apparent in the years following when the alcohol-associated ceramics reappear, though still in appreciably smaller numbers. The obvious decline at this time really entrenches itself in the first half of the second century AD when no datable ceramics are known. There are examples which we know date to this period, but it is unfortunate that evidence as to whether they belong to the earlier or latter half of this century is unknown. Even when taken into consideration these ceramics provide little information but the connection to alcohol and food preparation is still inherent.

7.7.1 The Site

The final phase of the Kabeirion is one of regression: some of the structures disappear⁴¹ and there does not seem to be any major new construction work.⁴² The only known building works to have been carried out in this period are the addition of dining rooms to the western stoa 13, and the appearance of a tiled pit 25.⁴³ The addition of extra dining rooms would confirm that there was still a need for facilities. Construction is hardly likely at a site where the numbers of patrons no longer necessitate the need for extra space. Indeed this view is supported by Pausanias' description of the site in the second century AD. This confirms that it was still in operation and indeed was flourishing, but the Kabeirion as an important sanctuary was definitely in decline. Although Pausanias fails to describe any of the buildings within the complex, his secrecy regarding the mysteries of the cult would indicate that the practices were alive and well in his day.⁴⁴ Archaeological evidence from the site, in the form of coins,⁴⁵ proves that there was still activity there in the fourth and fifth centuries AD.⁴⁶

7.7.2 Ceramic Usage

The decline seen in the preceding period continues in IX. The small amount of ceramics remaining at the site tend to relate to drinking, as the objects are more frequently connected to the preparation of alcohol rather than its actual consumption. It is possible that the rituals associated with drinking stayed in place, and that the objects used as cups were no longer clay but perishable materials.

⁴⁵ One coin is from the reign of Valentinian I, c.367-375 AD (Heyder and Mallwitz, 1978: 69 n.246). Another two coins of Geiserich, 418-477 AD are also recorded (Schachter, 1986: 88 n.3).

According to Alcock, it seems unlikely that ceramics were replaced so completely.⁴⁷ There is, however, a curious focus on lamps; they appear to be one of the few objects that feature regularly (in comparison to recorded data) during this period. This in itself is odd – since lamps are found at the site throughout its lifespan, and yet they had never reached significant numbers. Their importance here is more likely to be an anomaly due to the non-existence of other ceramic objects.

7.8 Summary

The Hellenistic period witnessed significant increases in the level of building works at the sanctuary. In terms of ceramics it is, without a doubt, a period in decline. The disappearance of the Kabeiric Ware style is certainly noticeable in the archaeological record. The last known skyphoi date to the second quarter of the third century BC, a date which corresponds directly to the last vestiges of this ceramic type. The rise of the bowl in the century after the loss of the skyphos would strongly point towards this vessel effectively replacing the favoured Kabeiric cup. The following graph shows the rise and fall of both the skyphos and the bowl.

Although the Roman phases of the sanctuary do not have the same scale of building works as the Hellenistic, the lessening of ceramics is still noticeable. There is no apparent explanation as to why pottery objects fell out of favour so significantly, bearing in mind their importance to the cult in the preceding centuries. The only explanation is that the ceramics were replaced by other items which could perform the same function. These alternative options could have possibly consisted of wood or glass with neither surviving particularly well in the archaeological record. This conclusion cannot be completely supported as it would seem extraordinary to witness a total avoidance of ceramic goods at the sanctuary.

Chapter Eight

Comparisons: The Ceramics of other Related Cult Centres

8.1 Introduction

As little is known of the exact activities at a sanctuary dedicated to the Kabeiroi, the archaeological remains provide the foundations of our hypotheses. It is apparent from other studies, notably Baumbach's research on the votives offered to Hera, that there is great variation in the function of the cult centres.¹ As we have seen in Chapter 1 the Kabeiroi are notoriously difficult to identify and characterise. The problems in confirming their role in the Greek pantheon should, to some extent, be reflected in the archaeological record. Different sites will, hypothetically, show variations in their votives. These offerings can be used to indicate relationships with the gods. We should also hopefully see similar patterns of consumption based upon the generic activities of the Kabeiric cult, namely the rituals experienced by the participants as a whole. Thebes is a unique sanctuary, simply on the basis of its ceramic evidence alone, but is nevertheless representative of the cult as a Pan-Hellenic phenomenon.

8.2 Locating the Sanctuary: Kabeiric Sites in the Landscape

Topographically the Kabeiric and related sanctuaries for which the physical position is known, or at least described in the literature, provides some interesting information. On the basis of this evidence there are two distinct types of location, either rural or urban; no sites have been documented on the fringes of settlements. Urban sites are mainly dedicated to the Samothracian Theoi either as the sole deities or in conjunction with the Kabeiroi. Rural sites tend to place more emphasis on the Kabeiroi, with the Samothracian Theoi appearing less frequently.

Table 8.1: The topographic features of the Kabeiric and related sanctuaries.²

The urban sanctuaries do not have a significant amount of information attributed to them. There are unfortunately rarely any references to particular features at a sanctuary. The cult at Anthedon is mentioned by Pausanias as operating out of the Carnesian grove,³ but for sites without excavation little else can be said. Kythnos and Delos are interesting in their own right. In topographic terms, Delos has strong similarities to some of the rural complexes, as it is tucked into a fold of land with a water supply.⁴ Kythnos' position on the hillside of the Acropolis seems remarkably prominent,⁵ although viewshed analysis may prove that it is actually hidden from certain angles. If this is the case, the sanctuary would bear more of a resemblance to the rural locales in terms of its unexpectedly secluded position. Ilion is the exception. Located prominently on the citadel, the site is not secretive but is placed in a position where a clear view of the island of Samothrace is possible.⁶ As the sanctuary is dedicated to the Samothracian Theoi this would indicate a potential relationship between the two cult centres.

The information regarding the rural locations is more complete, although some are only tentatively placed within this landscape. There do however seem to be two distinct types. First is the inland rural setting, where the site is secluded (i.e. Thebes, Samothrace (see Figure 8.1, p.322) and Imbros).⁷ These tend to have their own water supply and in the case of Thebes and Samothrace, prominent rock formations upon which the cults seem to have been originally centred.⁸ This idea of a 'sacred geography' with the use of natural features is an important element in cults across the ancient world.⁹ Secondly, Lemnos' coastal position may look somewhat different, but the headland and the manner in which the cult centre nestles into the cliff would suggest that unless viewed from the sea, the site remains concealed until the final approach (Figure 8.2, p.323). There does seem to be an element of secrecy surrounding these cult centres – privacy appears to be emphasised, and the presence of natural features, albeit trees, rocks or the sea, appears to have actively encouraged the placement of a sanctuary in that specific location.

8.3 The Ceramics

The Theban material gives us a relatively clear picture of the ceramic development and usage at this particular sanctuary of the Kabeiroi. In order to understand the Kabeiric cult in broader terms we need to clarify whether Thebes is a representative example of this mystery cult. Are the ceramics utilised at Thebes comparable to those used elsewhere? Alternatively, have local factors (particularly the identity of these deities) affected the manner in which the cults operated?

8.3.1 The Sanctuary of the Kabeiroi on Lemnos

For the full table of the ceramic material from Lemnos, see Appendix 8.7 at the end of this chapter (p.351).

Although the material from Lemnos is perhaps unfairly biased towards the coarse wares and in particular those used for cooking, there are some similarities.¹² The sanctuary on Lemnos is said to be the oldest of the Kabeiric cult centres, and the high levels of ceramics in the seventh century BC would confirm that. The decline in the ceramics in the sixth century suggests that interest in the site waned, but by the fifth century there was a revival. It is perhaps possible that this may represent a scenario of abandonment followed by a rediscovery of a Dark Age/Geometric cult.¹³ The last prominent period of ceramic usage can be seen in the third century BC, and the quantity of this the material declines dramatically thereafter.

When looking more closely at the fourth and third centuries BC, when Thebes is at its ceramic peak, it can be noted that it is not until the mid fourth century that ceramics start to increase. The third century is actually remarkably quiet in ceramic terms but the material is nevertheless frequently present in the archaeological record.

Overall, the ceramics have a publication bias, because the cooking wares are well represented; fine wares, on the other hand, are present but not in the numbers we would normally expect. The pieces recorded in this study clearly show a similar trend to Thebes as food and drink appear to be of great importance to this cult. In the annual reports from the excavations, more information is available but it is unclear whether this has subsequently been published/presented elsewhere.¹⁴ On the basis of all the data available there is an emphasis on drinking cups with the most popular types proving to be kantharoi (Figure 8.3a-b, p.326), skyphoi and karchesia.

According to an article published on the cooking wares from the sanctuary, there was one chytra which bore a striking resemblance to those examples found at Thebes (Figure 8.4).¹⁷ There is no further expansion on this point in any of the other publications. The presence of this chytra could point to possible communication between the North Aegean and Boeotian sanctuaries.

8.3.2 The Sanctuary of the Great Gods on Samothrace

Despite the early foundation of the sanctuary, ceramics are not particularly prominent until the sixth century BC. In the period between the eighth and sixth centuries there is an emphasis on drinking paraphernalia – drinking cups, amphorae, oinochoai, etc. By the sixth century we also see the appearance of items associated with food preparation (mortaria) although it seems likely that feasting was a feature of the sanctuary from a much earlier date. In the fifth century BC the ceramic levels increase rapidly, a trend which continued into the fourth century. Once more it is the drinking materials that dominate this period, but items with connections to votive purposes and food preparation are visible in increasing numbers. The third century sees a dramatic decline; drinking is still prominent, with bowls replacing cups in much the same manner as the Theban Kabeirion where there was a change from Kabeiric skyphoi to Hellenistic relief bowls. Food-associated items remain a constant feature of the period. From the second century BC until the first century AD there is considerable decline in the quantity and quality of the ceramics. Characteristics of the earlier centuries remain but only as a poor reflection of the past. This scarcity suggests that ceramics were not required at the same levels as before, so are we witnessing a replacement of pottery with objects made from other materials? The few pieces listed as Byzantine and Medieval can be connected with the removal of stone from the sanctuary for lime production.¹⁹

Looking more closely at the fourth century BC, it is not until its second half that the pottery increases. There are only the occasional votive pieces, as the majority constitute food and drinking materials. For the third century material, the only artefacts with specific dates belong to 300-275 BC. There is the possibility that this signifies a decline at the sanctuary, but building works during this century indicate that this was not the case.²¹

8.3.3 A Wider Perspective

For the full tables of the ceramic material from the comparative sites, see Appendix 8.9 at the end of this chapter (p.369).

There are generalised trends which can be identified for those mystery cult sanctuaries whose data is unsuitable for the manner of presentation used within the thesis. The Eleusinion at Athens has a broad range of ceramics present at the site, but it is unclear whether many of the pieces are from the sanctuary or if they belong to other occupation phases at the complex. The identification of the sanctuary however is based on the ceramics. The discovery at the site of four deposits of plemochoai, specialised vessels connected only with the mysteries at Eleusis (as well as inscriptions) provides the evidence for the sanctuary to be positively identified.²² The majority of the plemochoai date from the fifth to second century BC and in addition to these vessels a number of deposits of terracotta figurines were also found.²³ The emphasis on this particular vessel can be used as an indicator that its function was directly connected to the activities at the cult centre. The information from Eleusis itself is somewhat vague. No catalogues of the ceramics have been published but there are references to pottery finds in Mylonas' 1961 volume.²⁴ There is very little discussion on the types of vessel found; all the vases mentioned are fine ware and the iconography is only briefly described. On the basis of the vase scenes there appears to be generally little connection between what is represented on the vessels and the activities at the cult centre.²⁵ There are a few vases whose scenes could be interpreted as being directly based on the rituals but these are rare.²⁶ This would suggest that the imagery of the Theban Kabeiric Ware is unique within the iconographic record as it is not normal practice to show scenes of ritual practice. The role of kykeon in the practices of the sanctuary could be directly relevant to the activities of the Kabeiric cult.²⁷ We know from literary evidence relating to Eleusis that initiates there re-enacted the fast of Demeter following the abduction of her daughter Persephone, before consuming an intoxicant (kykeon) which represented her breaking the fast.²⁸ The actual physical properties of kykeon are not clear – it may be an intoxicant but likewise it could merely represent a basic foodstuff.²⁹ At Eleusis, this intoxicant is unlikely to have been alcoholic, as there appears to have been a prohibition against wine at the site.³⁰ In the Iliad, kykeon is recorded as just a simple food or drink.³¹ However, other references to kykeon in the Homeric epics suggest that it may indeed have had an intoxicative effect.³² In Homer's Odyssey, Hermes warns Odysseus about the properties of Circe's potion which will enchant him.³³ The creation of this kykeon is described and sounds fairly innocuous as to its contents, the exception being the drugs added by Circe.³⁴ It is referred to again when Circe offers Odysseus this drink.³⁵ Curiously this scene is depicted with regularity on the vases from the Kabeirion at Thebes.³⁶ As Eleusis had re-enactments it would seem quite feasible that the Theban site did so as well.³⁷ Seating arrangements at the sanctuary would facilitate large-scale entertainment, although it is not possible to definitely prove that this was the case.³⁸

As Pemberton explains in the introduction to the volume on the Greek wares from the sanctuary of Demeter and Kore at Corinth, the ceramics can be used as an indicator of the activity at the site.³⁹ Hypothetically the ceramics should be influenced directly by the site architecture. The dining structures could be used to suggest that certain types of pottery would have been used at the site.⁴⁰ Bookidis' summary of the main finds at the complex would confirm this.⁴¹ Although there was a lack of animal bones, there was an emphasis on cooking pots of the endocuisine type,⁴² very similar to those seen at Thebes;⁴³ a rejection perhaps of large scale feasting activities in favour of smaller, more communal eating arrangements. Unlike the sanctuary at Eleusis, this Corinthian site appears to have no wine prohibition, a fact reflected in the large quantity of drinking paraphernalia.⁴⁴ The revival of the sanctuary in the Roman period shows similarities to the later phases of the Theban Kabeirion. Although cooking wares and votives are known (in relatively low numbers), the majority of the objects excavated are designed for the consumption of food and drink.⁴⁵

If we consider the ceramics from those sanctuaries with no connection to the Kabeiroi or the related gods, there are some interesting observations upon which we can draw. The two sites dedicated to the female deities, Artemis Orthia at Sparta and Hera at Perachora, have their origins firmly established in the eighth to sixth centuries BC.⁴⁶ Although the mix of ceramics at Sparta shows a fairly balanced presence of food, drink and votive objects, the material at Perachora is different.⁴⁷ Here the dedicatory types of objects are more popular, but there is also a large number of drinking vessels. For the masculine sanctuaries, there is perhaps more cohesion in the types of ceramics found. At the sanctuary of Zeus at Nemea, the bulk of the pottery dates from the fifth to third century BC which corresponds to the ceramic peaks at Thebes, Lemnos and Samothrace. The spread of pottery shows a broad mix of food, drink and votive types.⁴⁸ The sample from the sanctuary at Poros is relatively small but does show similar trends to Nemea and the Kabeiric sites.⁴⁹ In the fifth and fourth centuries BC there is an increase in the ceramics, with the majority belonging to the category of feasting and drinking. Interestingly, at the three sanctuaries that have material dating beyond the third century, there is a significant decline in the levels of ceramics after the second century BC.⁵⁰

The 'missing' ceramics belonging to the period after the second century BC can have various explanations. Firstly, as has been suggested elsewhere, the ceramics may have been replaced by objects manufactured from different perishable materials but there is no evidence to confirm this.⁵¹ Secondly, the sanctuaries may have required less ceramic material due to changes in the rituals practised; yet again there is no information that would support this claim. The final possibility is that the material from this 'grey' period was not retained by the excavators, or not published, but it seems unlikely that all projects would treat the later ceramic corpus in this manner.

⁵⁰ See Appendix 8.9, 8.9.2 (Perachora), 8.9.3 (Nemea), 8.9.4 (Poros).

8.3.4 Fabrics (Clay Types)

For the Kabeiric sites, as we can see in Figure 8.6 (p.334), the complexes tend to use local fabrics in preference to imported wares. The picture at Thebes clearly shows the desire for locally produced ceramics. There are imported wares at the site, mainly Attic with a few examples from the north and east Aegean, the Dodecanese and the Cyclades. Samothrace mainly used a local fabric with a small amount from the immediate geographical area, primarily the North Aegean and Ionian regions and there are some other pieces from the islands (Dodecanese). The largest category of imported ware is Attic, and there are, surprisingly, two pieces of Boeotian pottery. There are issues with the export of Boeotian material, so these may indicate personal, rather than trade, connections.⁵² The Lemnian material again is mainly local, with some Attic attributions. This data may be biased due to the simple fact that it is the coarse and plain wares which have been published rather than the fine ware vessels, either imported or locally produced. At all of the Kabeiric sites, Corinthian fabrics are negligible, which is peculiar when taking into account the city's reputation for trade and the popularity of their pottery.

At the other sanctuaries, the picture is remarkably similar (Figure 8.7, p.336).⁵³ At Perachora, the general range of fabrics has more variety and greater numbers. This ⁵¹ See Chapter 7, 7.7.2.

⁵² According to many scholars, the trade in Boeotian pottery was practically non-existent, supposedly due to the inferiority of the ceramics (Cook, R., 1997: 98, 180). The region is better known as an importer of pottery, whose styles were then imitated by the local artists (Ibid, 97). Those pieces that appear outside the region are often attributed to Boeotian citizens who carried these vases with them when they travelled.

⁵³ The excavation reports for Nemea have no information regarding fabrics, so this site cannot be included in this discussion.

may be attributed to Corinth's position as a trading centre and the contact with other areas could have resulted in pottery from across the Greek world and beyond being brought within the reach of visitors to the sanctuary. The sanctuary of Artemis Orthia in Sparta shows a similar pattern to the Kabeiric sites. The best represented in the archaeological record is the local fabric, which suggests that this was not a Pan-Hellenic sanctuary but one solely connected to the local inhabitants. Poros also has its differences: here the imported fabrics are at similar levels to the local ones. The dominance of Corinthian and other Peloponnesian fabrics in the archaeological record is not unexpected when the location of the island is considered. Neither is the number of pieces originating from the Aegean islands, as Poros lies on a trading route.

8.4 Kabeiric Iconography in the eastern Mediterranean

Unlike the ceramic corpus from Thebes, the material from the other Kabeiric sites in terms of iconography is relatively disparate. There is no assemblage comparable to Kabeiric Ware but there is evidence which can be considered. This discussion is presented merely as a means of testing the ideas and concepts that have been presented by the Theban data and is not designed to be an exhaustive study of all the related information.⁵⁴ Rather it is based on a representative sample.

The material from the other sites can be divided into three categories: ceramics, numismatic evidence and sculpture. What is clear is that the anthropomorphication of the divinities is remarkably similar despite differences in location or association. In a recent volume, Blakely makes the assertion that there is a common iconography to the Kabeiric deities.⁵⁵ However, she presents this related identity as one which is deformed or grotesque, a genetic trait inherited from the supposed father of the Kabeiroi, Hephaestos, on the island of Lemnos.⁵⁶ In fact, substantially different conclusions can be made from a close study of the material.

8.4.1 Ceramics

As previously stated, the other sites are frequently lacking in ceramic evidence, so realistically the only two sites with suitable material for consideration are Lemnos and Samothrace.⁵⁷ There does not appear to be a comparable relationship between these sanctuaries and a single prominent iconographic theme or style, similar to that which exists between Thebes and Kabeiric Ware.

On the basis of the iconographic information provided from the two sites, there is only one vase which has a scene of interest. This single scene relating to the Theban sanctuary shows two male figures conversing in a manner only occasionally seen in the Kabeiric corpus (Figures 8.9-10, p.338-339).

Figure 8.10: Conversation scene upon a Theban vase (Cat. No.86, Pl.19e).⁵⁹

The fact that this scene type is relatively rare in the Theban corpus and that only a single example from Lemnos is known prevents any major conclusions being drawn. The Lemnos cup, an imported piece from Attica, may on an iconographic level have nothing to do with the rituals practised at this sanctuary. We know that there are other similarities in the ceramic material from Thebes and Lemnos (see section 8.3.1), so there is a small possibility that this vase was selected specifically for the site on the basis of its decoration.

8.4.2 Numismatics

When considering the numismatic evidence from the other sites identified as having a connection to the Kabeiroi or one of the related deities, it is apparent that there are some recognisable trends. Visually the coins show a clear correlation in the manner of depiction (Table 8.5, p.340). Influences from other gods, namely the iconographic motifs or identifiers, are very obvious. The most prominent example of this is the Dioscouric elements we can observe in the coinage.⁶⁰ Twinned youthful figures and double stars are all indicative of two possible interpretations. Either the coins are showing the Dioscouroi, or alternatively, the scene is depicting other deities who have adopted the Dioscouric iconography. The connection between the Kabeiroi and Dioscouroi was briefly mentioned in Chapter 1 (Table 1.1, under Farnell, p.41).

The overall trends of the numismatic iconography have two distinctive representations of the Kabeiroi. Firstly, the figure can be seen as the bearded mature male,⁶¹ often shown with a pointed hat and wreath, and secondly, as a youthful beardless figure.⁶² The juxtaposition of the images is interesting, as is the fact that both can be seen on the coinage from a single city (Birytis).⁶³ This suggests that there are at least two Kabeiroi recognised – one mature, the other young – an interesting parallel to the father-son pairing at Thebes. Taking this theme further and by comparing the characters more closely, it is noticeable that there are differences, however subtle. Regardless of the fact that youths are almost universally similar in terms of their iconography in ancient Greek art, it is when considering the younger figure in connection with the Kabeiroi that they could easily be identified or equated with the Theban ‘Pais’ (Figure 8.11a-b, p.343). Despite this association, there are no representations of Pais from Thebes showing the pointed hat that he is habitually seen wearing on the coins. However the mature figure matches the representations of the Theban Kabeiros very closely (Figure 8.12a-b, p.343). This could perhaps be taken to imply that the supposedly Dionysian influence of Kabeiros' appearance is either much more widespread than previously considered and not restricted to Thebes alone, or that Kabeiros, as a unique entity, had a distinct iconography all of his own. The first option, that of another figure, in this case Dionysos, influencing the interpretation of the god's appearance seems a more feasible conclusion, especially when we take this proposal further. As shown on the coins from the various sites, the mature Kabeiros is depicted with a pointed hat. Like Pais, in the Theban corpus there are no representations of a hat-wearing Kabeiros. The only figures to wear such hats on the Theban vases are heroes, such as Odysseus, Cadmos and Alexandros (Paris). Are we then to interpret these coins differently, or are we to re-evaluate the Theban ceramics? The iconography from Thebes clearly supports the theory that it is the legendary heroic stories that are being illustrated. The coinage is perhaps more negotiable in terms of interpretation. In Baldwin's article on the gold coinage from Lampsakos, the head on one of the coins clearly matches the supposed Kabeiros coins from elsewhere (Figure 8.13a, p.343).⁶⁴ According to Baldwin and Wroth, the head is of a hero, probably Odysseus.⁶⁵ The identification of the head as Odysseus corresponds well with the representations of that figure on Kabeiric Ware vases (Figure 8.13a-b, p.343). How then are we to interpret the other coins? If we accept the established convention that these do represent the Kabeiroi, we have to assume that they may indicate the presence of a different iconographic trend to the Theban one. The final image may have similarities in terms of the beard and general character of the figure, but the origins are very different. Therefore it could be argued that Thebes is a derivative of a Dionysian iconographic tradition, whereas the numismatics from the other sites have their visual roots in the depictions of heroic myth. In this instance we can perhaps point to Sestos and the references to Kabeiros as a Homeric hero.⁶⁶

The only depiction showing a strong connection to metalworking is from Thessalonike.⁷⁰ The Kabeiros here is a singular deity and carries a hammer and the interpretation is that the Thessalonikan cult has its origins on the island of Lemnos.⁷¹ This draws the theory of Hephaestos and the metal working element into the various cults on the island,⁷² and cannot be used as a conclusive argument that all Kabeiric cults carry this relationship or patronage. In fact the overall theme instead seems to reflect a highly localised interpretation, rather than something truly Pan-Hellenic. The other representations, with the exception of the strong Dioscourgic elements, show images which would not seem out of place at Thebes. The reclining figure on the coinage from Tomis reflects the symposiastic nature of much of the ceramic iconography.⁷³ Drinking vessels on the coins also appear to draw on the Boeotian repertoire, yet these scenes also hold true to the depictions of the Homeric tradition.

8.4.3 Sculpture

The three key reliefs to consider here are from Pergamum, Lebadeia and Larymna.⁷⁴ Although the Larymna relief is of uncertain identification and provenance, the scene is remarkably similar to a possible ram sacrifice on one of the coins from Kyzikos (Figure 8.14a-b).⁷⁵ The general pose does have parallels with elsewhere in the ancient world and interestingly, there are some very strong similarities belonging to the Mithraic cult (Figure 8.15, p.345).⁷⁶ It can be proposed that these scenes depict a Kabeiroi or are at least connected to the Kabeiric cult, but they are not exclusively restricted to this group of deities.

The Lebadeia relief (Figure 8.16, p.346), like the one from Larymna, has similarities to the iconographic styles from elsewhere. In this instance, a vase from the Theban Kabeirion has a possible initiation scene corresponding to this relief.⁷⁹ Both vase and relief have a single figure who is completely robed from head to toe, disguising the gender. Many scholars, Daumas included, have argued that this is a wedding scene, the enrobed individual being the bride (see Chapter 6 (6.3.1, p.244) for full discussion).⁸⁰ The presence of a robed person on this relief goes some way in confirming that the scene on the vase is connected with initiation rather than matrimony.

The final relief worth investigating in some detail is the altar frieze from Pergamum. Although fragmentary, notably the head being missing, the figure confirms that representations of the Kabeiroi are not necessarily grotesque.⁸³ The overall form of the body corresponds well with the symposia images from the Theban Kabeirion.

There are however other sculptural remains which have connections to either the Kabeiroi or the related divinities. As with the coinage, the use of iconography associated with the Dioscouroi is prominent (such as the relief from Fasilar).⁸⁴ The relief from Ephesus is perhaps more dubious in its visual connection to the Kabeiroi, as they are more often described as attendants to the more powerful deities, frequently a Mother Goddess.⁸⁵ This triumvirate in the relief could see parallels in the three-headed coin from Eretria with its central female head and the two bearded males in the supporting positions.⁸⁶

8.5 From One Site to Another: Communication between the Sanctuaries

The 'Koes' kantharos, despite its dubious provenance, is our best ceramic evidence for contact between Thebes and Samothrace (Figures 8.18-19, p.347-348).⁸⁷ Although the vase is decorated in a recognisably Kabeiric manner, the inscriptions beneath one of the handles are of specific interest. A. Ure hypothesises that the duplicated inscriptions are the result of two phases during the decoration; the first to the right being misspelled, the second to the left a correction.⁸⁸ The word 'Koes' is not known at Thebes but according to Hesychius, κοις or κοης was the word used on Samothrace for a priest of the Kabeiroi.⁸⁹ It was suggested that this piece was a locally-made vase for a Samothracian visitor to the Theban sanctuary, and that the vessel was further personalised by having 'Koes' inscribed in Ionian script.⁹⁰ The few pieces of Boeotian pottery present at Samothrace may represent a similar scenario, either that of a Boeotian travelling to the island site, or an inhabitant of the island returning with votive offerings.

⁸⁷ According to the archives at the Ure Museum of Classical Art and Archaeology, the vase is reputed to have been located in the vicinity of the sanctuary.

The bond between Thebes and Samothrace is further strengthened in the similarities of the structures. K. Lehmann and Spitle suggest that the Theban theatre was directly inspired by the Samothracian example.⁹² As Thebes had a cavea from the outset, the notion of including a theatre-like structure at the site cannot be attributed to Samothrace – in fact, it was the stone theatre that owed much to its North Aegean inspiration. Furthermore there is evidence which demonstrates that Samothrace (amongst others) gave money to the Theban sanctuary, probably to assist with the restoration of the site in the late fourth century BC.⁹³ In Thrace, an initiate of the sanctuary, King Cotys I, was said to have been in frequent contact with the site, although the nature of these affiliations is not known.⁹⁴

Apart from these occasional references, evidence for communication between the sites is very rare. There is the chance that the Thessalonikan cult derived from the site on Lemnos,⁹⁵ and that there were communications between Lemnos and Thebes. Without further evidence, the cults, whilst aware of each other's existence, must be considered to have operated as separate and autonomous entities.

8.6 Summary

Blakely's assertion that the iconography of the Kabeiric cult is overwhelmingly pygmy-like and grotesque seems unfounded.⁹⁶ On the basis of the ceramics, numismatic evidence and sculptures, the figures are very clearly undistorted and instead reflect the ideals of the human form during this period. Whilst the statues to whom Herodotus refers show caricatured or grotesque elements,⁹⁷ there is also the very strong possibility that these figures are not Kabeiroi. Rather they are the Egyptian equivalent of the Kabeiroi, and have simply been 'translated' into the Greek, in much the same way that Ammon is often identified as Zeus in the Greek sources. Alternatively there seems to be a long-standing tradition of presenting Kabeiros as a well-proportioned male in a similar manner to depictions of Dionysos or those of the traditional representations of Greek heroes.⁹⁸

This adoption of a recognisable iconography for the Kabeiroi/Kabeiros across the ancient world is in contrast to the apparently localised habits of the cult centres. In terms of the ceramic fabrics known from the three Kabeiric sites (Thebes, Lemnos and Samothrace), the predominant material is always the local clay. Imported pieces are known, but these are rare in comparison. At one of the centres dedicated to the other deities this also appears to be the case. Artemis Orthia at Sparta also shows a strongly localised supply of pottery, whereas Hera at Perachora and Poseidon on Poros both show higher levels of imported wares, perhaps a result of their positions within an active trading network. This individual feel to the Kabeiric cult can also be seen in the lack of communication between the sanctuaries. In view of the large number of Kabeiric sanctuaries that exist, the evidence of interaction is relatively scarce. The only site showing strong connections is Samothrace, as many of the other sites have inscriptions referring to visits to the island. Samothrace is the only Kabeiric site that could be described as Pan-Hellenic (see Appendix A for all of the sites with such evidence). Thebes and Lemnos have no such claims, hence perhaps the differences in their definition of the deities. At Thebes the Kabeiroi are connected to fertility and the vine, on Lemnos with fire and metalworking. The Kabeiroi appear to mean different things to different people. Yet it is clear during the fifth to third centuries BC Thebes was not experiencing a situation very different to that of other Kabeiric sanctuaries or those cult centres dedicated to alternative deities within Greece. The fourth century BC is characteristically a period of increased ceramic use. The almost exclusive emphasis on those items associated with drinking and feasting at the Kabeiric sites reflects one of the cult-specific activities practised. The relatively low numbers of items clearly identifiable as votive offerings implies that the ceramics were not the most popular choice of dedications to the Kabeiroi in contrast to the offerings presented to other gods.

BOEOTIAN KABEIRIC WARE:
THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE CERAMIC OFFERINGS AT THE THEBAN KABEIRION IN BOEOTIA

Chapter Nine

Conclusions

9.1 Introduction

What is the significance of the ceramics at the Theban Kabeirion? Is it possible to identify the role that they played at the site based on the use of the vessels and the manner in which they were decorated? What was the purpose of the distinctive Kabeiric ware style? This thesis aimed to answer these questions and explain the relationship between the ceramics and the sanctuary, and determine whether the events occurring outside the cult complex both in Boeotia and the wider Greek world affected this connection.

On the basis of the research presented in the preceding chapters it would appear that much information can be gained from evaluating these objects carefully. Both their function and their iconography can shed valuable insights into a cult about which there are many questions regarding its purpose and activities. It can also be demonstrated when comparing the ceramics from Thebes and other Kabeiric sanctuaries that there are similarities, which would suggest both a common ancestry and practice.

It is by reconsidering the illustration in Chapter 2 that presented the socio-archaeological approach designed to answer the research questions and aims that we can see that the main objectives have been accomplished (Figure 9.1, p.390).

9.2 The Theban Kabeirion

What can the ceramics from the Kabeirion at Thebes tell us about the sanctuary, and more importantly their use within that setting? Obviously trying to understand something as complex as a religious centre from only one element of the available information proved difficult and other aspects needed to be considered. Therefore it was deemed necessary to include the important historical events (on a Theban, Boeotian and more generalised level) and also the developments in site architecture in each of the discussions on the various phases of the site.² Discussion of the other archaeological remains has been a key element throughout the main chapters, as the data provided by this material are important when testing the theories that have been constructed on the basis of the ceramics.

9.2.1 The Ceramics: Decoration and Function

Based on the ceramic typology presented in Chapter 3 we can see a clear focus on the ceramics which have a function in the rituals involving the consumption of food and alcohol, particularly wine. In addition to this, there are also several votive objects which have strong connections to Dionysos and the Orphic myths relating to him.³ When considering the ceramics present at the sanctuary throughout its lifespan, it is apparent that they more often have a clear, functional purpose rather than simply being classified as pieces of a votive nature. The oversized skyphoi decorated in the Kabeiric Ware fashion do however present a conundrum,⁴ as they may have been dedicated and displayed at the sanctuary in a manner similar to the monumental ceramic grave markers that were once erected in the Athenian Kerameikos. Alternatively these large examples may have had a more practical function as mixing bowls for wine in the same manner as a krater, and there is also the possibility that the large skyphoi performed both of these roles. The limited number of ceramics with a definite votive purpose is itself interesting and would imply that pottery was not the logical choice for dedications. Indeed the discussion in 9.2.2 demonstrates that other votives were offered in considerable quantities, and it was perhaps the functionality of the pottery – in its day to day usage at the site – that prevented it from becoming popular as a dedication.

9.2.2 The Ceramics: Iconography

Yet if we accept this explanation, that vases were chosen because of their role, how can we explain the iconography? If pottery is purely practical, why choose examples decorated in a certain manner? It is interesting to note that the pottery present at the site does not vary very much in regard to its purpose, even throughout the Kabeiric Ware period. This would imply that ceramics were primarily chosen for their use and the iconographic style was, to some extent, a secondary concern. Therefore the Kabeiric Ware period, with its distinct decorative style, presents an anomaly – a phase where function and iconography were combined. The very uniqueness of the scenes emphasises its importance and the nature of its relationship with the site. The specialised iconography would suggest that Kabeiric Ware had a dedicatory purpose even if the vase form was practical and that the images chosen must have had some significance. Comic scenes are known on other Greek vases and these are relatively widespread but there is nothing comparable to this exclusive relationship between sanctuary and pot.⁵ The nature of these vases appears to prevent them from being used outside the sanctuary. All the examples found away from the sanctuary depict fairly neutral scenes and these do not incorporate any features alluding to the finer details of the more secretive activities or elements at the cult complex (Table 9.1).

Hunting scenes are present on two of the examples and whilst there is a strong hunt-based iconographic trend at the site, isolated examples have not provided much information. Even the locations of some of these objects present some elements worthy of further discussion. Those pieces from the Thespian Polyandrion, Thebes and Chaeronea all belong to graves (either individual or mass) that contained Theban dead; it is not unexpected perhaps to find the pots in this context, considering the strong possibility that the interred may have once had connections with the sanctuary. Overall the lack of vases from outside the site simply confirms the theory that the Kabeiric Ware vessels were exclusively used within the sanctuary.

How do we explain the iconography? On the basis that the use of this ceramic type was restricted to the one site, the scenes must have been directly relevant. If we accept that specialised dedications are a feature of ancient Greek religion, such as the offering of replica body parts to Asclepios, then the pots must logically follow the same path. There is no need to generalise the images when the target audience is already aware of the subtleties behind the scene. This means that within the as yet un-located Theban potters' quarter there were specific workshops or artists to whom visitors to the sanctuary would favour in order to obtain the required ceramics.⁶ The 'Koes' kantharos implies that some vases at least were made or personalised to order, rather than simply being pre-manufactured pieces that were purchased off the peg.

The iconography also shows a strong emphasis on a relatively small group of scene types (Table 9.2, p.394). This type of repetition, with only a few variations on the basic template, would refute to some extent the idea that vases were sometimes made to order. On the other hand, there are a number of isolated scene-type examples which still do not stray far from the original library of scene topics. The obsession for particular representations is best seen in the depictions relating to the mythological past. Heracles on a Greek vase is not an unusual scene, but the frequency of images showing Odysseus and Circe as the latter prepares a potion is particularly curious – especially in relation to the importance of alcoholic beverages at the Kabeirion.

One feature worth further exploration is the evidence pertaining to some form of interaction between participants at the sanctuary. The presence of scenes showing groups of both genders in conversation with one another does hint at something beyond the purely ritual. The early evidence from the sanctuary which points to worship in terms of a familial group would explain the ability for both men and women to converse freely with one another.

The iconography remains, however, a curiosity. There are unfortunately no real explanations as to why the Kabeiric Ware vases are executed in a comedic fashion. They may perhaps be reflecting theatrical elements, either actual performances at the sanctuary or adaptations of Athenian and Corinthian iconography.⁸ Other elements on the vases would argue against the theory that all Kabeiric Ware vessels are reflecting the theatre, rather the emphasis on rituals and similar scenes would suggest that whilst a caricatured style is adopted, the images themselves are careful renderings of cult activity, which an initiate would recognise.⁹ When considering the secrecy of the cult, is it possible that the caricatures have been designed to draw the uninitiated eye away from the ritual? In a sense the vases could be said to be hiding in plain sight, with humour deflecting the viewer away from the events they are witnessing. Humour is not simply a modern perception.¹⁰ This is perhaps an extreme interpretation, but the vases must have been exposed to public gaze, which would include the uninitiated, during their time at the workshops that manufactured them and also when they were on display waiting to be sold. As we know of only a small, select group of artists that decorated vases for the sanctuary, it is also possible to tentatively suggest that the vase painters themselves were initiates of the cult. Would the sanctuary have allowed non-members to manufacture goods for the complex, considering the content of the scenes? Likewise the context in which these vases were used may also explain much of their iconography. If we remember that the majority of the vessels were designed for use within a symposiastic setting, their comic nature becomes very straightforward to explain. There is little difference between a Kabeiric Ware vessel and a kylix that has been decorated to appear like a grotesque mask while drinking,¹¹ or one that has a frightening monster or a sexual or comic scene on the interior that is only revealed once all the liquid has been consumed. If we interpret the vases in this context, they are perhaps designed to liven up ritual activity. Parodying the cult itself would surely appeal to the participants, especially after the consumption of intoxicants.

When considering the role of alcohol within the cult from a ritual perspective, intoxication in initiatory practices can have deeper ritualistic interpretations. The three-stage rite of passage format, as described earlier (Ch. 1, 1.3.2, p.44), can be applied to the consumption of alcohol itself. The liminal phase can be associated with the first drink, the separation phase with the period of intoxication, and the aggregation phase when the alcohol is leaving or has left the system.¹² The new identity associated with this last stage can be reflected in the memories of activities performed whilst under the influence or on the physical problems of detoxification.¹³

It is the intoxicative elements which make alcohol so important in particular events on the basis that 'its heightened social significance derives from...these psychoactive properties'.¹⁴ Interpretations of the effects of this intoxication can be divided into two responses: first, that alcohol changes a person and allows them to develop a new identity or tap into their subconscious.¹⁵ The second suggests that alcohol allows an individual to escape from themselves, to literally lose themselves in the intoxication.¹⁶ Whilst we know that alcohol can change people, for better or worse, how does this relate to the rituals of initiation? It would appear that intoxication is key. Lewis-Williams and Dowson have proposed that there are various stages of hallucinations when a subject is intoxicated;¹⁷ these episodes may have enhanced the visual and aural stimulation that we associate with the second and third phases of cultic initiation.¹⁸ Any object or phrase however ordinary, shown or spoken to an intoxicated person and accompanied by appropriate ritual would seem to have elevated importance. Social conditioning would enable the initiate, even if the object or phrase was later forgotten, to apply this idea or knowledge to themselves.¹⁹ However, as membership was a personal choice, it is important to remember that an individual would already have been willing to view the rituals as significant and that alcohol would merely heighten this emotion.²⁰

The idea of transformation due to the consumption of a particular substance, in this case alcohol, can also relate to the iconography at the cult centre. The tale behind a common scene depicted on Kabeiric Ware vases originates in Homer's Odyssey, where Hermes warns Odysseus about the enchanting properties of Circe's potion and the fate of his crew, who were transformed from men into swine.²¹ One of the strongest examples of this scene shows the crew in humanoid form with pig-like masks standing rather like a chorus. The mask is a tool for transformation with a not dissimilar effect as intoxication. A mask can change an individual instantly. In trying to understand the transformation, we must first recognise that the audience plays a significant role in determining its reception. Suspended disbelief on the part of the audience, be it in a theatrical or ritual setting, is necessary. Certain conventions are attached to those who are undergoing the transformation and an audience will make assumptions based upon their prior knowledge.

We know that ritual and drama are related,²² and it is clear that ritual in ancient Greece is based upon performance.²³ Indeed it is possible that masks and the idea of transformation predate drama, and that their role in ritual was primary.²⁴ The terracotta masks from the sanctuary of Artemis Orthia at Sparta represent an anomaly in the archaeological record – masks like this do not appear in other sites of a comparable date.²⁵ It is interesting to note that since many of the masks could have been worn, it is distinctly possible that cult activities may have involved re-enactments of some of the key events relating to the goddess. From the Kabeirion, there are numerous vases which depict figures wearing masks. Whilst a number relate to the stage, there are a small number which have no theatrical connection. The use of masks in anthropological studies indicates strong ritual association, especially in the context of the mask representing a god.²⁶ Like the consumption of wine, the mask or transformation offers an opportunity of liberation; they can provide release or help to portray an individual truthfully.²⁷

9.2.3 The Ceramics: Chronological Trends

Prehistoric

It is evident that the site was used in the Neolithic period, although its exact function has not been established as the few sherds found offer no connection to the later sanctuary.²⁸ No other ceramic finds were located at the cult complex until the ninth to eighth centuries BC and the total numbers are again limited, yet the quality of the pieces left would suggest purposeful dedication rather than random objects that have just turned up (Figure 9.2). Accepting the potential issues with Schmaltz's dating of the bronze and lead figurines from the sanctuary,²⁹ the pottery perhaps could represent a development in the dedications at the site. The isolated examples of pottery, however, would suggest that these were not the primary dedication choice.

Archaic

Apart from certain examples present at the site in the Geometric period, ceramics do not really flourish until the sixth century BC; a development which is directly connected with the evolution of the tholoi at the sanctuary. This association of pottery and architecture indicates that the earlier ceramics may have been more functional in their presence instead of merely votive. The tholoi are structures used for dining and presumably drinking, and it is interesting to note that those vase forms found would support these claims. Whilst there are ceramic objects that are at best designated as dedicatory, for example the Panathenaic amphorae, these are only present in very limited numbers. The emphasis on drinking and dining in a ritual context has firmly established itself during this period.

Classical

That ritualistic drinking, and dining to some extent, is present before the appearance of Kabeiric Ware would indicate that this pottery style developed as a direct reaction to the needs and wants of the sanctuary. This would explain the almost total dominance of the skyphos which was produced in a variety of sizes and in a form suitable for use in both the preparation and consumption of wine.

The chronological events of this period also impacted on the sanctuary's ceramics. Although the destruction of Thebes in 335 BC was thought to have curtailed activity at the site, the ceramics indicate that dedications continued. If the dating of the large number of unguentaria is correct,³¹ then it is possible that these items belong to the period that had previously been thought of as archaeologically quiet. Even if the unguentaria date after 315 BC they still reflect the resurgence of Thebes. This is quite clearly seen in the ceramics at the sanctuary as there are a large number of wares dating to the late fourth century BC.

³¹ Cat. Nos.1892-1898, totalling over 650 vases, all dating to the fourth-third century BC, post 336 BC.

Hellenistic

The decline of Kabeiric Ware is not reflected in the activities of the sanctuary, as the same rituals appear to have remained. Drinking vessels are still present at the site, though the form may possibly have changed, which would indicate a continuation of tradition. The decline of the sanctuary in the latter half of the Hellenistic period is presumably directly linked to the dissolution of the Boeotian Confederacy in 171 BC.³² However, the pottery that does remain in use stays faithful to the long-standing practices of dining and drinking.

Roman

Throughout the Roman period ceramics continually decline (although this may be partially explained by the use of glass vessels). This does not appear logical as the sanctuary was undergoing major development architecturally. Why expand a site when the patron numbers have declined? The addition of extra dining rooms in the final phase would suggest that the site was still popular. The ceramics dating to this period show an emphasis on the preparation of wine more than the physical consumption of it as drinking vessels are scarce.

9.2.4 The Ceramics and the other Artefacts

In order to understand the ceramic trends we need to consider them not only as isolated artefacts but also in conjunction with the other small finds from the sanctuary. The excavation reports subdivide the small finds into four categories: ceramics, metal artefacts, glass and stone, and terracottas, and these have been retained for this discussion.³³ Figure 9.3 (p.403) presents a full chronological representation by century of all the artefact types found at the Kabeirion from the tenth century BC to the fifth century AD. On a chronological level, observations have often been made regarding the relationship of one artefact type to another.

³³ For some unexplained reason the volume on glass and stone finds also contains some pieces made from bronze and bone. This peculiarity of cataloguing has been retained on the CD-Rom, although underneath the revised heading of 'Glass, Stone and Miscellaneous Items'; the bronze artefact has been included within the 'Metal' catalogue.

The most detailed comments on the development of artefacts at the Kabeirion can be found in Schachter (Table 9.3, p.402).³⁴

Based on Schachter's observations, it would seem as though various artefact types only have limited lifespans, but as we can see from Figure 9.3 (p.403) this is not the case. The metal figurines, primarily bulls made of bronze and lead, do decline in the sixth century but are present at the site until the fourth century BC.³⁵ If we consider the fact that many were rededicated, it is apparent that these objects were still important enough to be given back to the god with fresh inscriptions (Figure 9.4, p.404). This also explains Schachter's comments which place many of the early metal objects in deposits that also contain later material.³⁶ Metal and terracotta figurines were found together in the vicinity of a supposed altar, dated 500-275 BC,³⁷ and metal and terracotta figurines were also located in a substantial deposit of unguentaria from the late fourth century BC.³⁸

³⁴ Schachter, 1986: 96-106.

³⁵ This idea that bull dedications completely cease is erroneous, terracotta animal figurine continue to be dedicated during the later periods which would cast a very different light on many published conclusions if this evidence was considered (Idem, 2003: 127).

Both Heyder and Mallwitz, and Schachter make the same statement regarding the transition from the sixth to the fifth century BC and the change from metal finds to clay.⁴⁰ Whilst this is the case to some extent, the duration of the period involved was much greater (Figure 9.3, p.403).

⁴⁰ Heyder and Mallwitz, 1978: 60; Schachter, 1986: 98.

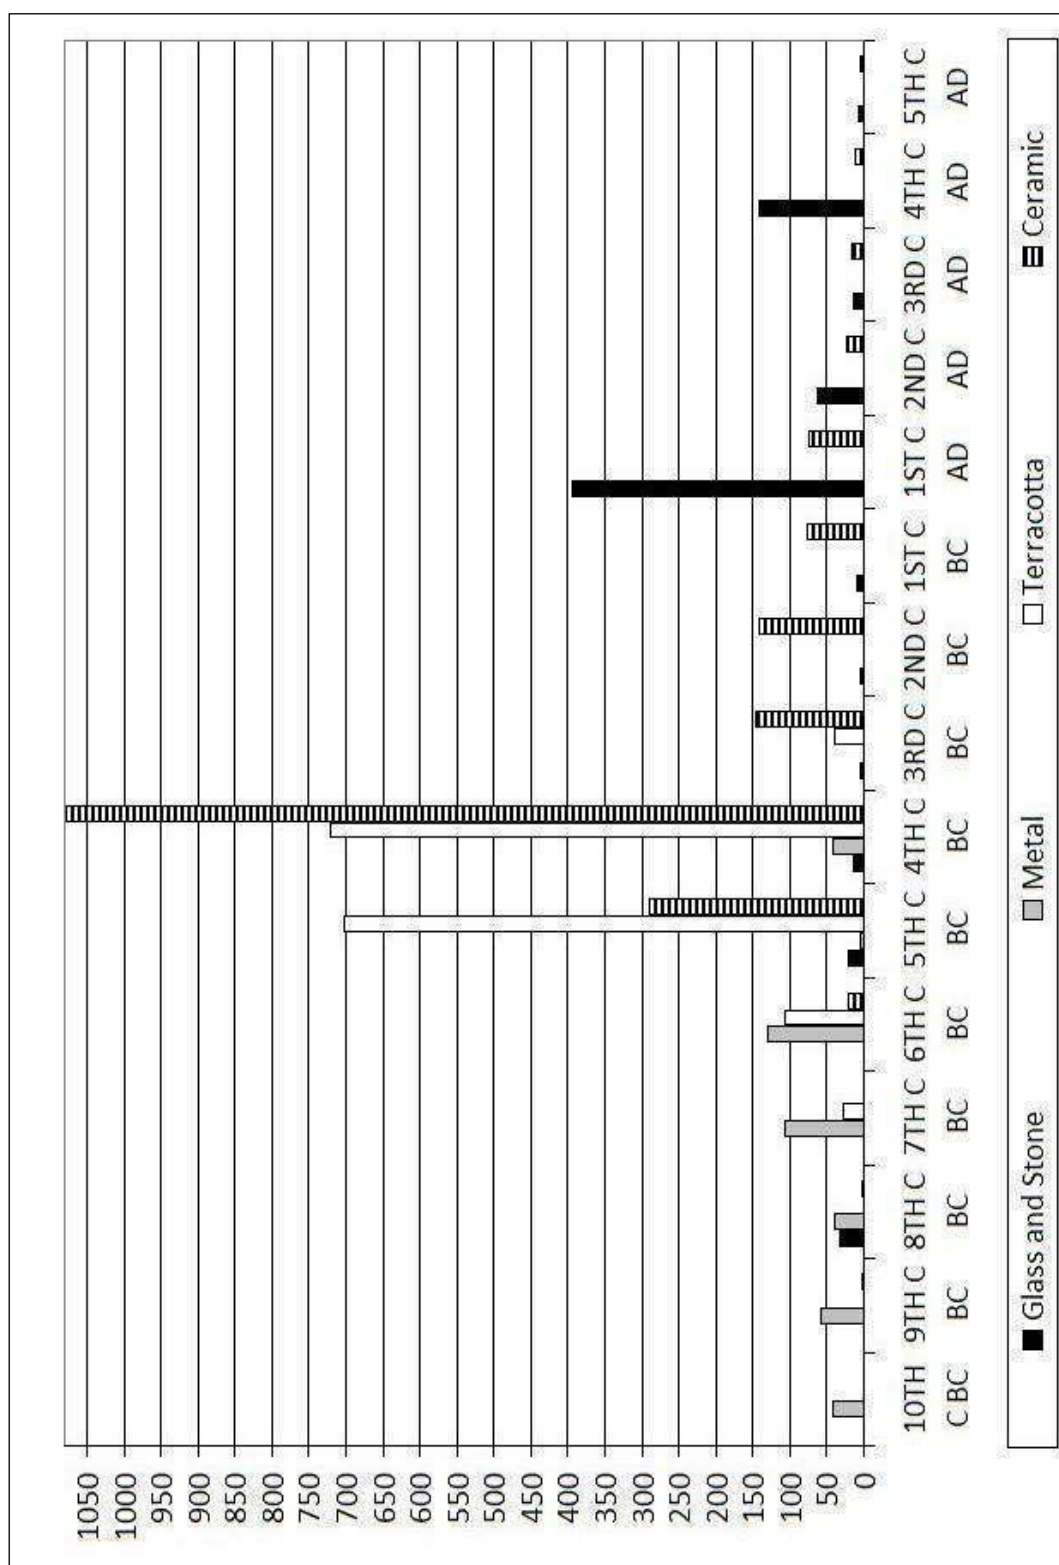

Figure 9.3: Complete comparison of all artefact types from the Kabeirion.⁴¹

⁴¹ As the dates of the terracottas are generalised, the total numbers are averaged over the periods stated. For example, 208 figurines of youths with cockerels, dating to the fifth-fourth century BC, averaged at 104 figurines per century. Whilst the figures for this graph are meant to be as authoritative as possible there are some areas of concern. Schachter (1986: 121) also refers to terracotta animal figurines which are first mentioned in Wolters (1890). There are no other references to these objects apart from this article and they are not included in Schmaltz (1980). This is due to the fact that the projected seventh volume in the series of excavation reports detailing the non-human terracotta figurines and coins was never published (Schachter, 2003: 136). The dating of the metal artefacts follows Schmaltz (1974), although the problems raised by Roesch's (1985) re-evaluation of the inscriptions are recognised. The dates given by both Schmaltz and Roesch are included in the catalogue of metal artefacts on the CD-Rom.

The most notable problem with Schachter's stance on the terracottas is that his argument stated that they, along with black glaze kantharoi, disappeared from the sanctuary after the sack of Thebes in 335 BC. As seen in Figure 9.3 (p.403), terracottas were still being dedicated at the sanctuary in the third century BC including figurines of youths which were used as votives at the site from the fifth century onwards. The apparent stoppage of black glaze kantharoi may also be reconsidered. There are approximately nine kantharoi dating to the late fourth century BC that could shed doubt upon the theory that these were no longer dedicatory offerings.⁴² There is also a substantial number (216) of black glaze kantharoi which are currently undated and further study may provide evidence as to whether the kantharoi which potentially date post-335 BC do actually represent an anomaly.

Glassware only appears in Schachter's list in Period 1 (Table 9.3, p.402) and was present at the site for much of its history (eighth century BC to fifth century AD), yet has attracted little interest. The clear switch from beads to potential vessel fragments is of great importance when it comes to considering the ceramics from the site (Figure 9.5).

The apparent abandonment of ceramic drinking vessels during the Roman Imperial period may be connected to the rise in the use of glass.⁴³ The complete replacement of one fabric type is unlikely, and based on the data, ceramic drinking vessels did continue at the sanctuary albeit at very low levels (Figure 9.6, p.406).⁴⁴ Although this suggestion is tentative, further research into the glassware of the Theban Kabeirion may provide the best opportunity for observations to be made on the later life of the sanctuary. The glassware from the site has not been completely published, so any observations or conclusions can only be tentative. Schachter suggests that the glass vessels found at the site are more closely connected with dining, a scenario which claims that ritualised symposia were no longer performed.⁴⁵ Whilst some of the glass vessels could be for dining, there is no reason to suppose that no drinking cups would be present in the corpus. Some ceramic drinking paraphernalia was found at the site during the later periods which supports the theory that the ritual drinking continued (Ch. 7, 7.7.2, p.315). Likewise Schachter's statement (Table 9.3, period 6, p.402) that drinking rituals decreased at the site in the late third century BC also fails to consider the replacement of drinking vessels like the skyphos and kantharos with mouldmade bowls. The mouldmade bowls (the so-called Megarian type) were certainly used in Athens as the premier drinking cup during the third to first centuries BC.⁴⁶ There is no reason to assume that Boeotia did not also follow this fashion.

Combining the evidence from the sanctuary with data available from the surveys conducted in the Boeotia region also provides some interesting points of comparison. Data from the early stages of the Cambridge/Bradford Boeotian Expedition demonstrated that there was a shift in population and/or a decline in the number of sites (based on a decrease in pottery sherds) in the Hellenistic period following a peak in the Classical.⁴⁷ Comparing this information with the data from all artefact types known from the sanctuary (Figure 9.3, p.403), it is evident that the cult centre underwent a similar decline, before rising again under Roman rule. If we consider that the majority of artefact types found were bull figurines and ceramic vessels for the preparation and consumption of wine, it could be presumed that these reflect the agricultural trends of the region. On the evidence supplied by Hesiod, it is clear that viticulture was present in Boeotia and he provides details on the yearly maintenance of the vine.⁴⁸ If the Kabeirion only held an annual festival, it could be tentatively suggested that the celebrations would not occur at a time when labour was required in the fields. Hesiod makes no reference to animal husbandry, and cattle are only mentioned in connection with traction.⁴⁹ The frequent appearance of bull figurines may be due instead to their standing as an animal which denoted status upon the dedicator.⁵⁰

The artefacts from the site clearly reflect the practices of the period, and offer numerous insights into the cult. The specialised dedications in the form of terracottas and metal figurines which disappear in the fourth-third centuries BC clearly indicate a shift in priorities at the sanctuary. The continued use of ceramic and later glass vessels for drinking and dining perhaps imply that it was the ritual activities which were the important part of the cult rather than the dedications.

9.3 The Theban Kabeirion in a Wider Context

Is it possible to answer the question as to whether the development of Thebes is characteristic of Kabeiric sanctuaries generally? The Lemnian material does present complications and conclusions cannot be accurately reached as the publications available do not represent a full sample of the ceramics from the sanctuary. It is the cooking wares that are presented more thoroughly, a surprising departure from the total focus normally given to the fine wares. At Samothrace the picture is more complete but this pottery represents only the published material from a small group of structures. Separate deposits do not appear to be included, and there is no evidence to corroborate whether the catalogues contain all the excavated material. Despite these problems, the initial observations show parallel trends. There are obviously some discrepancies. It is clear from the ceramic evidence alone that Lemnos was ritually active at a much earlier date than Thebes or Samothrace. This would support the theory that Lemnos was the first of the Kabeiric sanctuaries to be established.⁵¹ All three sanctuaries show high levels of ceramic use in the fourth to third centuries BC and display a general similarity in the types of pottery. However, studies carried out on pottery from other Greek sanctuaries indicate that this may be a more generalised trend. The sanctuaries of Poseidon on Poros and Zeus at Nemea also exhibit increased pottery use in these centuries. At Perachora ceramics decline in the fourth century but the data for Artemis Orthia at Sparta has not been published – so a more accurate conclusion cannot be reached.

⁴⁷ Bintliff & Snodgrass, 1985: 139.

⁴⁸ Hes., Op., 570-573 (pruning/digging, February-March), 610-614 (harvesting/bottling for wine, September) plus a list of optimum days for tending the vines (780-781) and opening a cask (815-819).

⁴⁹ Ibid., 437-441.

More detailed evaluation of the ceramics at Lemnos and Samothrace may reveal other differences and similarities between the sanctuaries. This is an avenue worth pursuing in the future, in view of the lack of studies which consider the Kabeiric cult as a whole. Further research into the ceramic use at other sanctuaries, in relation to the evaluation of both form and chronology, may also confirm that the fourth century generally was a high point for ceramic use within ritual contexts. As the data for these other sanctuaries does not post-date the first century AD, further consideration should be given as to why this is lacking: are publications purposefully avoiding the Roman material and if they are, would this alter our perceptions of ceramic use at many of the sanctuaries?

We can state that the ceramics had a clear and definite role at the sanctuary for much of its lifespan. They were firmly placed in both the ritual activities and dedicatory practices of the site. Although their primary function was firmly entrenched in the ritual consumption of wine and feasting, there is some evidence which suggests that they may have been offered as prizes in selected events performed at the sanctuary. However, their emphasis clearly lies with alcohol. Architecturally this function is also supported; the continuation of dining facilities at the cult site, from the tholoi of the earlier phases to the large multiple-roomed structures of the Roman period, indicates that this was central to the cult. Fluctuations in the levels of ceramics in the BC periods can often be connected to events in Thebes, Boeotia or Greece as a whole. Alexander the Great's sack of Thebes, the dissolution of the Boeotian Confederacy and the revival of Greek cult centres by the Romans are all reflected in the ceramics and the sanctuary itself. These variations in pottery levels can also be linked to the rise and fall in importance of the other offerings made at the sanctuary, and the declining interest in metal and terracotta figurines must surely have contributed to the increase in ceramics. Likewise the apparent rise in glass vessels may be connected to the almost complete disappearance of pottery vases. The relationship of the various votive offerings (and especially the glassware) at this site deserves further consideration, as this may better explain why later ceramics are so rare.

So is Thebes characteristic of Kabeiric sanctuaries in terms of its ceramic use? On the basis of the data from Lemnos and Samothrace, this does appear to be the case. This suggests the adoption of a common tradition or practice which necessitated a similarity in usage. Further research is necessary to confirm whether this is indeed the case, bearing in mind that the data for both of the North Aegean sanctuaries is incomplete, and more sites would be needed for comparison in order to prove the hypothesis. Three cult centres therefore do not contribute sufficient qualitative or quantitative information to fully encompass the intricacies of what typifies and constitutes the enigma which is the Kabeiric religion.

Appendix A:

Catalogue of Kabeiric and Related Sites in the eastern Mediterranean and Beyond

This catalogue presents those sites connected to the Kabeiroi, the Samothracian Theoi and the Megaloi Theoi which have been identified as possible comparative candidates. The evidence for each location is discussed and reference made to the relevance of the material to this thesis.

As the thesis focuses on the sanctuary of the Kabeiroi at Thebes, this site has been indicated in bold/italics. Those sites whose ceramics have been cited in Chapter 8 (the sanctuary of the Kabeiroi on Lemnos and the sanctuary of the Great Gods on Samothrace) are marked in italics. To avoid repetition it was decided not to include summaries of these sites, as they are discussed fully within the thesis.

Megaloi Theoi and Great Gods

The former title is used when the gods identified are known by the name 'great gods', the latter where great gods appears to be an epithet preceding another divine name.

A.1 Mainland Greece, the Aegean and Ionian Islands and Macedonia

A.1.1 Achaea

1. Sanctuary of the Gods called Almighty¹

Tritaia, Achaea

Mentioned by Pausanias in the second century AD, his comments relating to festivals indicate that the sanctuary is still active.²

A.1.2 Akarnania

2. Sanctuary of the Great Gods³

Actium, Akarnania

Dionysos of Halicarnassus reports that the sanctuary was still active in the late first century BC; the site is featured during his discussion regarding the travels of Aeneas.⁴

A.1.3 Arkadia

3. Reference to the Megaloi Theoi⁵

Gortys, Arkadia

Inscription refers to the Megaloi Theoi.⁶

4. Sanctuary of the Megaloi Theoi and Sanctuary of the Great Gods the Dioscouroi⁷

Kleitor, Arkadia

Coinage dates to the fifth or fourth century BC (Figure A.1, p.413).⁸ Pausanias writes about the latter sanctuary and refers to bronze statues located there; it could be presumed that the site was still active in the second century AD.⁹

5. Sanctuary of the Megaloi Theoi and Megalai Theai (Great Goddesses)¹¹

Megalopolis, Arkadia

Inscription dates to the first century BC.¹² Pausanias discusses the sanctuary as well as describing some of the features of the site, which includes a statue of Demeter who he identifies as one of the Megalai Theai.¹³

A.1.4 Argolid

6. Sanctuary of the Goddess Meter and the Megaloi Theoi¹⁴

Argos, Argolid

Inscription is undated and records a list of offerings dedicated to Meter.¹⁵ There are also references to a possible οἰκία (house).¹⁶

7. Sanctuary of the Megaloi Theoi, and Isis and Serapis¹⁷

Methana, Argolid

A.1.5 Attica

8. Reference to the Megaloi Theoi¹⁹

Athens, Attica

Inscription mentions the Megaloi Theoi.²⁰ Initiate lists in Samothrace record a number of individuals from Athens (total of 11 names).²¹

9. Sanctuary of the Megaloi Theoi and Dioscouroi²²

Kephale, Attica

Mentioned by Pausanias in the second century AD when he identifies the Dioscouroi and Megaloi Theoi as being the same set of deities.²³

10. Sanctuary of the Megaloi Theoi²⁴

Piraeus, Attica

Consecrated c.41 AD, but cult is active in the second century BC on the basis of the epigraphic evidence.²⁵ The celebrations appear to have involved processions, boat races and sacrifices, although the specific location is not known.²⁶ It has been suggested that the Piraeus inscription is connected with the site at Kephale but this has been refuted by Hemberg.²⁷

A.1.6 Boeotia

11. Sanctuary of the Kabeiroi²⁸

Anthedon, Boeotia

The sanctuary is described by Pausanias in the second century AD,²⁹ as being in a grove in the centre of Anthedon with possible affiliations to the Theban site.³⁰

Larymna, Boeotia

Relief dates to 460-430 BC (Figure A.2).³² Originally published in 1913,³³ the lower part of the scene shows a male figure astride a ram in the act of pulling back its head in order to slit its throat with a knife.³⁴ It was said to come from Larymna but this provenance is uncertain, as is its attribution to be Kabeiric.³⁵

14. Inscription detailing a Kabeiric personal name⁴²

Tanagra, Boeotia

An undated clay plaque with the inscription KABIPΩ|ΩPHA,⁴³ Hemberg suggests that this is perhaps a theophoric personal name.⁴⁴

15. Sanctuary of the Kabeiroi

Thebes, Boeotia

Pre-sixth century BC - fifth century AD, on the basis of the architecture, epigraphy and artefactual evidence (ceramics, terracottas, metal objects) evidence, plus references in Pausanias.

16. Possible Worship of the Samothracian Theoi, the Samothracian word for priest is found in an inscription⁴⁵

Thespiiai, Boeotia

Inscription is undated.⁴⁶ The presence of the Samothracian title for a religious official can be associated with the close proximity of the Theban sanctuary and its associations with the deities and cult of Samothrace.

17. Sanctuary of the Kabeiroi, and possible Private Worship within the city⁴⁷

Olynthus, Chalkidike

From within the city, artefacts (metal figurines) date to the fourth century BC.⁴⁸ Five of these comprise a male and female Herm on a single base. The male has the bearded head of Priapus; the female head has been tentatively identified as Aphrodite (Figure A.5, p.418).⁴⁹ In the excavation report this Herm was described as a reminder 'of the male and female Cabir'.⁵⁰ The discussion accompanying these statuettes offers no explanation for the use of the word Cabir, and the arguments appear to imply the existence of a cult based around a Mother Goddess.⁵¹ All are

A.1.8 Phokis

19. Sanctuary of Dioscouroi, Curetes or Kabeiroi⁵⁹

Amphissa, Phokis

Pausanias describes a mystery cult of the boy lords, who could be any one of the three groups of deities.⁶⁰

20. Sanctuary of the Kabeiroi or Megaloi Theoi⁶¹

Naupaktos, Phokis

Mentioned by Pausanias in the second century AD. He tells the story that some citizens of Naupaktos adopted the practices of the Theban cult and started performing them in their own city. There is no explanation as to what eventually occurred, except the line 'and soon afterwards justice overtook them'.⁶²

26. Sanctuary of the Kabeiroi, Samothracian Theoi, Megaloi Theoi and Dioscouroi⁷⁶

Delos, Cyclades

The cult at Delos appears to have established itself in the late fourth or early third century BC within the area known as the sanctuary of the Foreign Gods (Figures A.6-7a-b, p.423).⁷⁷ This date is supported by other evidence which demonstrates that the cult of the Great Gods at Samothrace only increased in popularity during the Hellenistic period (second century BC).⁷⁸ The site was previously known as the Kabeirion before that date, perhaps based on the sites in Boeotia and the North Aegean islands.⁷⁹ The attribution of a single sanctuary to three separate sets of deities indicates that over time, the identities of these groups became fused. By the end of the second century BC it is apparent that the Megaloi Theoi, the Samothracian Theoi and the Kabeiroi are often merged into a single, multi-titled group.⁸⁰ Guettel-Cole emphasises that the Dioscouroi, at Delos at least, remain separate from the Samothracian Theoi.⁸¹ It is not until the second century BC that the Athenians begin referring to the site almost exclusively as a Samothrakeion.⁸² Inscriptions tell us that there were priests of the Samothracian Theoi on the island and that these served for a single year.⁸³

From the excavations it became apparent that no ceramic evidence was found; this unfortunately has rendered the site unsuitable for this study.⁸⁴ There was however a lamp which had similar iconographic motifs to those depicted on the coinage of Thessalonike.⁸⁵ There are other finds from around the area of the sanctuary but these cannot be definitively linked to the Kabeiric cult (Table A.1, p.422). The lack of finds is interesting bearing in mind that in the second century BC, an inscription recorded the many treasures that were held by the sanctuary.⁸⁶ Other inscriptions record personal dedications.⁸⁷ The lack of evidence may be explained by the numerous raids that were made on the island itself, it is a known fact that the sanctuary received damage during these attacks.⁸⁸ The site was also outside the area fortified, leaving it particularly vulnerable.⁸⁹

The topographical location of the cult centre is similar in many ways to Thebes and Samothrace – it lies in a fold of land with a water source, reflecting perhaps the secretive nature of the cult as suggested in Chapters 4 and 8 (see also Figure A.6, p.423).⁹⁰ The cult structure, although sometimes labelled as a temple, may well have been dining facilities; inventories confirm that the sanctuary had a number of couches in the mid second century BC.⁹¹

Kythnos, Cyclades

On one of the lower levels (known as the middle terrace) of the acropolis of Vryokastro (Figure A.8a-b), two structures and an inscription were located in the nineteenth century (Figure A.9, p.425).⁹⁵ The marble slab reads [ΣΑΜ]ΘΟΠΑΚΕΙΩΝ ΘΕΩΝ,⁹⁶ indicating that there was a connection to the Great Gods of Samothrace on the island; this is presumed to be a personal dedication.⁹⁷ The two structures were thought to have had a cult function and dated approximately to the fourth or third century BC (Figure A.9, p.425).⁹⁸ Building two was excavated, and on the basis of the artefacts discovered it is believed to have been dedicated to Aphrodite.⁹⁹ The other structure, building one, is now described as the probable site of worship of the Great Gods of Samothrace.¹⁰⁰

Melos, Cyclades

Coinage dates to the fifth century BC, some with Phoenician elements (Figure A.10).¹⁰⁴ The iconography suggests the possibility that the features depicted could represent either the Kabeiroi or the Megaloi Theoi.¹⁰⁵ A link with Samothrace is also recognised; inscriptions from the sanctuary of the Great Gods show that Melos sent delegates (theoroi) to the site.¹⁰⁶

Paros, Cyclades

Inscriptions date from the second century BC to third century AD. These suggest that the Megaloi Theoi were worshipped here, in conjunction with Hermes and Demeter.¹¹² An association with Samothrace is also known; inscriptions from the sanctuary of the Great Gods show that Paros sent delegates (theoroi) to the site.¹¹³

31. Cult of the Kabeiroi¹¹⁴

Syros, Cyclades

Coinage dates from the third century BC to the second century AD (Figure A.11),¹¹⁵ both the iconography and inscriptions from the numismatics indicate worship of the Kabeiroi.¹¹⁶

32. Dedications to the Megaloi Theoi, but with an emphasis on healing (the Megaloi Theoi as Asclepioi?), Altars of the Samothracian Theoi and the Dioscouroi¹¹⁸

Thera, Cyclades

Two third century BC inscriptions, both from altars, are dedicated respectively to the Samothracian Theoi and the Dioscouroi.¹¹⁹ The inscription relating to the Samothracian Theoi was a dedication by Artemidorus.¹²⁰ A third inscription dating to the second century AD refers to both the Megaloi Theoi and the Asclepioi.¹²¹

33. Possible Cult of the Megaloi Theoi, plus links to the Telchines¹²²

Karthaia, Keos, Cyclades

Inscription dates to the third century BC,¹²³ and has been restored. The strong presence of the Telchines on the island makes it unlikely that the Kabeiroi were worshipped here.¹²⁴

Samothracian Theoi.¹⁴⁰ Guettel-Cole observes that there was a specific organisation, koina (translated as 'hall'), operating in the city to honour these deities.¹⁴¹ There is also an inscription dating to the first century AD from Aulai which makes reference to the Samothracian Theoi, indicating that there was still interest in these deities.¹⁴²

From Rhodes (specific locations unknown) there are a number of individuals on the Samothracian initiate lists (total of 16 names).¹⁴³

A.1.13 North Aegean Islands

40. Sanctuary of the Kabeiroi, plus Chios is referred to as 'the island of the Megaloi Theoi'.¹⁴⁴

Chios, North Aegean Islands

One inscription dates to the third century BC (239-236 BC), a second is undated.¹⁴⁵

It is also implied in one of the inscriptions that in the vicinity of a Kabeiric temple the Mother (Meter) is worshipped.¹⁴⁶ A connection with Samothrace is also known; inscriptions from the sanctuary of the Great Gods show that Chios sent delegates (theoroi) to the site.¹⁴⁷ Initiate lists in Samothrace record a number of individuals from Chios (total of three names).¹⁴⁸

Between Roxada¹⁵² and Agios Konstantinos there are olive groves, which are said to be the location of the sanctuary of the Great Gods of Imbros (Figure A.12).¹⁵³ Supporting this claim are three inscriptions referring to the deities, two at Agios Konstantinos, the other at Agion Apostolon.¹⁵⁴ The latter inscription records the presence of the Megaloi Theoi, stating that the columned hall of these deities was restored.¹⁵⁵ In Fredrich's report, there are references to two thrones of Dionysos, also held at Agion Apostolon,¹⁵⁶ and a possible inscribed altar amongst other architectural remains (probably a church) at Agios Dimitrios.¹⁵⁷ The evidence from

Agios Dimitrios has been linked with Hermes, but it is possible that the deities were worshipped in conjunction with one another.¹⁵⁸

Interestingly, according to Stephanus Byzantius the island was once known as Kabeirion, which certainly suggests that there may have once been Kabeiric connections.¹⁶⁰

45. Possible Sanctuary of the Kabeiroi¹⁶⁵

Lesbos, North Aegean Islands

Underwater remains have been identified and confirmed at 'Kabeirion'; however, there is no information as to the location of this site in relation to the island.¹⁶⁶ Neither of the known cults/sanctuaries have references to the Kabeiroi, so it is possible that this is a new cult centre.

46. Koina of the Samothracian Theoi, with an associated procession¹⁶⁷

Methymna, Lesbos, North Aegean Islands

According to the inscriptions, Methymna was active in the second century BC.¹⁶⁸ Guettel-Cole observes that there was a specific organisation, koina, set up in the city to honour these deities.¹⁶⁹ According to the inscription there appears to have been a procession from the Prytaneion that was directly connected with the Samothracian Theoi.¹⁷⁰ A connection with Samothrace is also recognised; inscriptions from the sanctuary of the Great Gods show that Methymna sent delegates (theoroi) to the site.¹⁷¹

Halonnesos, Sporades

Inscription mentions the Megaloi Theoi.¹⁸²

A.1.15 Macedonia¹⁸³

50. State Cult of the Megaloi Theoi, the Samothracian Theoi and Hermes¹⁸⁴

Amphipolis, Macedonia

Inscription is from a votive offering and dates to the Roman period; it is a dedication by M. Caecilius Sotas to the Great Gods of Samothrace.¹⁸⁵ The presence of a caduceus on the votive suggests that Hermes may be one of the Samothracian Theoi in Amphipolis.¹⁸⁶ Guettel-Cole mentions another inscription which records the claim by an individual that he was initiated into both the Samothracian and Eleusinian mysteries.¹⁸⁷ After the second century BC, initiate lists in Samothrace record individuals from Amphipolis amongst those from other Macedonian cities (total of seven names).¹⁸⁸

Pella, Macedonia

An inscription mentioning Kabeiros (or the Kabeiroi), dates to the Roman Imperial period.¹⁹² Guettel-Cole refers to another inscription dedicated to the Theoi Megaloi, which perhaps relates to a temple of the Samothracian Theoi within Pella.¹⁹³

53. Personal dedication to the Samothracian Theoi¹⁹⁴

Philippi, Macedonia

The dedication is undated but is the only one outside the sanctuary on Samothrace that clearly states that it was erected by Samothracian initiates.¹⁹⁵ After the second century BC, initiate lists in Samothrace record individuals from Philippi amongst those from other Macedonian cities (total of five names).¹⁹⁶

54. Cult of the Kabeiroi¹⁹⁷

Thessalonike, Macedonia

Many gods were worshipped at Thessalonike, including Kabeiros, the patron god of fertility and the vintage.¹⁹⁸ According to Edson, the cult was introduced to the city from Samothrace.¹⁹⁹ Although it was reportedly popular with the Macedonian royal family, none of the evidence dates earlier than the Roman period.²⁰⁰ The inscriptions and numismatics date from the first century BC to the third century AD.²⁰¹ Kabeiros is featured frequently on Thessalonikan coins after the Flavian period (c.69 AD) (Figure A.16, p.436).²⁰² The dominant position of Kabeiros in the Inscription dates to the second or first century BC.²²² Hemberg observes that the inscription dates after the creation of priests of the Samothracian Theoi, which implies that there was a sanctuary dedicated to these gods in Mylasa at this time.²²³ A connection with Samothrace is also known; inscriptions from the sanctuary of the Great Gods show that Mylasa sent delegates (theoroi) to the site.²²⁴

Inscription undated.²²⁶ Hemberg believes that there is a temple of the Samothracian Theoi near to the sanctuaries of Heracles.²²⁷ The inscription providing this information may be incorrect, and the reference to Samothrakeion may relate to a street.²²⁸ A connection with Samothrace is also known; inscriptions from the sanctuary of the Great Gods show that Stratoneika sent delegates (theoroi) to the site.²²⁹

67. Cult of the Great Gods Kabeiroi²⁵¹

Tlos, Lycia

Inscription by Aristeides dates to the second century AD and refers to both the Kabeiroi and Dionysos.²⁵² Hemberg interpreted this to mean that the Kabeiroi and Dionysos had a common element, probably a priest, who performed duties on behalf of both of them.²⁵³ There is also the suggestion that the Kabeiric cult at Tlos may be of a similar age to that of Samothrace.²⁵⁴

A.2.8 Phrygia

72. Dedication to the Great Samothracian Gods²⁷¹

Apameia Kibotos, Phrygia

Inscription is undated, appears to have been dedicated by a man named Strato as a votive offering to the Great Samothracian Gods for their aid when he was in distress at sea.²⁷²

73. Altar of the Megaloi Theoi²⁷³

Tymandos, Phrygia

Limestone altar dates to the second century AD with relief decoration dedicated to the Megaloi Theoi.²⁷⁴ To the right, a figure on horseback can be seen attacking a boar with a spear, to the left a standing figure, in the centre a table.²⁷⁵ In iconographic terms, the figures in the scene resemble the Dioscouroi, but their identification as Kabeiroi is debatable.²⁷⁶

A.2.9 Pisidia

74. Dedication to the Samothracian Dioscouroi²⁷⁷

Fasilar, Pisidia

Inscription undated and carved directly into the rock, next to it is a relief showing the Dioscouroi, both are holding spears and a horse by the reins, in between them is an altar (Figure A.21, p.445).²⁷⁸ This is the only evidence outside Delos that demonstrates a link between the Dioscouroi and Samothrace.²⁷⁹

75. References to Oracles of the 'Daimon Megistos', Zeus and Demeter²⁸¹

Termessos, Pisidia

Inscription dates to the second century AD and is a list of approximately 56 oracles, one of which possibly belongs to the daimon Megistos.²⁸²

A.2.10 Pontus

76. City, possible connection to the Kabeiroi²⁸³

Kabeira (a.k.a. Diospolis, Sebaste, Neocaesareia),²⁸⁴ Pontus

Coins date from the first century BC to the first century AD, although those catalogued by Head do not have any immediate Kabeiric connections.²⁸⁵ There is no apparent evidence, with the exception of the name, to suggest a direct link with the Kabeiroi.²⁸⁶

A.2.11 Troad

77. State Cult of the Kabeiroi and the Megas Theos²⁸⁷

Birytis, Troad

Coinage dates to the third and second centuries BC and features a man's head (bearded or beardless) that has been identified as a Kabeiroi (Figure A.22a-b).²⁸⁸ On the basis of the coin evidence it has been argued that there was a cult of the Kabeiroi in Birytis in the early decades of the third century BC.²⁸⁹

78. Sanctuary of the Samothracian Theoi²⁹¹

Ilion, Troad

Inscription is undated and records the statement that it was to be erected 'in the sanctuary of the Samothracian Theoi'.²⁹² The sanctuary, identified in 1998, was used not only for the Samothracian Theoi but also Dardanos and Cybele.²⁹³ Architecturally the site is similar to those of other cult centres of this nature. A grandstand dating to the first century AD reflects the seating arrangements at the Theban Kabeirion and the sanctuary on Samothrace (Figure A.23, p.447).²⁹⁴ Material from the site indicates that it was active from the Protogeometric period to the third century AD.²⁹⁵ It is possible that an inscription found at Sestos was originally dedicated here, and perhaps stood in the vicinity of the temple to the

79. Potential Cult of the Kabeiroi²⁹⁹

Coinage dates from the sixth to third centuries BC and features a ram's head.³⁰⁰

Hemberg notes that the presence of a ram on the coinage does not confirm that the Kabeiroi were worshipped in this city.³⁰¹

A.3 Thrace and the Black Sea

A.3.1 Scythia

80. Cult of the Dioscouroi and the Samothracian Theoi³⁰²

Olbia, Scythia

Inscriptions date to the third and second centuries BC.³⁰³ One inscription from Olbia mentions an honorific inscription (perhaps accompanying a statue) dedicated to the Samothracian Theoi; there are also references to a priest of these deities.³⁰⁴ The presence of a priest suggests that there was an established local group who worshipped the Samothracian Theoi.³⁰⁵

A.3.2 Thrace

81. Dedication to the Samothracian Theoi³⁰⁶

Alexandroupolis, Thrace

Inscription is undated but mentions the Samothracian Theoi.³⁰⁷

82. Reference to the Megaloi Theoi³⁰⁸

84. Altar of the Samothracian Theoi, possibly within the Sanctuary of the Dioscourai³¹²

Byzantium, Thrace

Mentioned by Diodorus Siculus in his version of the journey of the Argonauts. According to Diodorus, when the Argonauts were caught out at sea in the middle of a storm, Orpheus offered prayers to the Gods of Samothrace.³¹³ The gods came to their aid and sent a sea-god to bring them safely back to shore; in thanks the Argonauts set up altars dedicated to these deities at the location which would later become Byzantium.³¹⁴ Initiate lists in Samothrace record individuals from Byzantium (total of two names).³¹⁵

85. Priesthood of the Samothracian Theoi³¹⁶

Chalcedon, Thrace

Inscription is undated. The priest of the Samothracian Theoi is mentioned in a list of priests who were to receive payment for the sale of another priesthood belonging to an unknown divinity.³¹⁷ A connection with Samothrace is also known; inscriptions from the sanctuary of the Great Gods show that Chalcedon sent delegates (theoroi) to the site.³¹⁸

86. Dedications to, and Priesthood of the Samothracian Theoi³¹⁹

Dionysopolis, Thrace

Evidence dates from the third century BC to the Roman Imperial period. The coinage shows some of the elements drawn from a variety of different deities, such as the Kabeiroi, the Dactyloi, Heracles and Dionysos amongst others.³²⁰ The

Gökçeören, Thrace

Inscription is undated but is a personal dedication.³²³

88. Priesthood of the Samothracian Theoi, plus Decrees to be set up within the Temple of the Samothracian Theoi³²⁴

Istros, Thrace

Coinage dates from the fifth century BC to the Roman Imperial period (Figure A.24).³²⁵ An inscription directly refers to the temple of the Samothracian Theoi in Istros and states that the text is to be erected at this site.³²⁶ There are also references to priests in the second century BC and the establishment of the Samothracian Theoi as a public cult of the city.³²⁷

89. Decrees to be set up within the Temple of the Samothracian Theoi³²⁹

Kallatis, Thrace

Active from the fourth century BC to the Roman Imperial period; this is based on the coinage (Figure A.25, p.451).³³⁰ A temple is mentioned in the inscriptions, although these are exceedingly fragmentary.³³¹

91. Inscription from the Altar of the Sanctuary of the Samothracian Theoi, references to the Kabeiroi³³⁷

Sestos, Thrace

Inscription dates to 210-205 BC. This dedication by a woman from Pergamum may originally have been made at Ilion.³³⁸ In the fifth century AD, Quintus Smyrnaeus refers to Kabeiros as a hero, rather than a god, who fought in the Trojan War.³³⁹

92. Sanctuary/Shrine of the Kabeiroi, equated with the Samothracian Theoi and the Megaloi Theoi³⁴⁰

Seuthopolis, Thrace

Active in the late fourth to early third century BC, the site has the earliest foreign inscription referring to the Samothracian Theoi.³⁴¹ According to Daumas, it was Seuthes II who first established the cult of the Kabeiroi at Seuthopolis; an earlier king, Cotys I, was said to have made frequent contact with the Theban sanctuary of the Kabeiroi.³⁴² There is also ceramic evidence which demonstrates contact with the North Aegean islands.³⁴³ It was Seuthes III who established the royal palace at Seuthopolis with its accompanying sanctuary/shrine and its hearth cult to the Kabeiroi in the late fourth century (Figures A.27-30, p.453-454).³⁴⁴ There has been the suggestion that the ruler of Thrace was directly connected to the cult of the Kabeiroi as he acted as a priest unifying political and religious power, although this may not have applied to other cults in the palace.³⁴⁵ Interestingly some of the epigraphic evidence reveals that at least one treaty was inscribed and placed within the sanctuary, indicating that the site was of particular importance.³⁴⁶

The palace has been excavated and the sanctuary/shrine identified (Figures A.29-30, p.454). The hearth appears to have had a specific role within the cult as it is elaborately decorated, far beyond what would be expected for domestic purposes.³⁴⁷ There is no reference to any finds in the sanctuary, but imported pottery from the Greek states was present in the city.³⁴⁸

93. Priesthood of the Samothracian Theoi³⁵³

Tomis, Thrace

Coinage dates from the third century BC until the Roman Imperial period.³⁵⁴

Inscriptions mention a priest of the Samothracian Theoi in the city, indicating that their worship was recognised there.³⁵⁵ This inscription also provides some information on the celebrations (liquid libations, processions and sacrifices)

98. Temple of the Kabeiroi³⁶⁷

Memphis, Egypt

Supposedly destroyed between 526-522 BC. Herodotus recounts that the Persian king, Cambyses, broke into the temple, insulted the statues and then burnt them.³⁶⁸

It is possible that Herodotus equated Egyptian gods with their Greek equivalents, rather than there actually being a Kabeiric temple at Memphis.

99. Sanctuary of the Samothracian Theoi, plus Decrees to be set up within the Temple of the Samothracian Theoi, Worship of the Dioscouroi and Kabeiric personal names³⁶⁹

Philadelphia, Egypt

Papyrus dates to 250 BC, personal names in the second century AD.³⁷⁰ The papyrus is the only evidence that indicates the possibility that there may have been a temple as far south as Egypt.³⁷¹ The presence of the Samothracian Theoi in Egypt may be linked with the Ptolemaic dynasty who brought Macedonian elements with them, including a long-standing connection with Samothrace.³⁷²

DECORATION

Ivy chain on shoulder, below is a black band. Below in figure scene is the back of a large animal, probably a bull. This suggests that the full scene, which has been lost, contained either a bull being offered to a reclining Kabeiros or to a Herm. On neck is the inscription, "Smikros dedicated [me] to the Kabeiroi" (ΣΜΙΚΡΟΣ ΑΝΕΘΕΚΕ ΚΑΒΙΡΟΙ). The unscripted area of neck is black, with a reserved band on the edge of the lip.

L-R: Bearded male figure and robed female figure, standing as a couple looking directly at each other, labelled Mitos (male) and Krateia (female). To their right stands a small nude male figure, labelled Pratolaos, he is clutching his hands directly beneath his chin and looking at the couple. Behind him and facing towards the left, nude male youth labelled Pais, dipping an oinochoe into a large krater. Placed at the far right, bearded figure of Kabeiros, (labelled), reclining, robed from waist down, fillet tied in a triangular formation around his head. One arm which is holding a kantharos is extended towards Pais. A fragment with a hooded female figure, bearing the name Satyra, is supposed to belong to this vase. On stylistic grounds there is no reason to dispute that opinion. Rim is black.

Chariot scene, only partially preserved including the front part of the chariot and the beam that connects it to the horses. Of the horses, the number of which is unclear, only the tails are visible. At the top of the chariot are small black objects, it is possible that these are hands. The chariot and horses move from left to right.

The vase is said to have been lost during WW2. A. Symposium scene: Three partially robed male figures, reclining on couches, small tables laden with items in front of them. The feet of all three figures are directed towards the left. The first figure is looking left, the second right, the third left. The third also holds aloft a large drinking cup similar in shape to a bowl or skyphos. B. Symposium scene: Two fragments known. The first showing a female figure facing right, in long robes, playing double flute. There is an object behind her, in front of her the end of a couch with the occupant's feet visible. The second, partially robed male figure, facing left, reclining on couch. It would seem probable that the feet seen on the fragment with the flute player connect to this figure. Behind the reclining male and facing left, youthful nude servant with wreath, carrying an oinochoe and kantharos, presumably to serve the reclining figure. Behind the servant, a large amphora. Vines and bunches of grapes above both scenes. Broad black band below the figure scenes, the rim and horizontal parts of the handles are black. Below the black band is a large ivy chain motif.

A. An Ogress, facing right, chases a male nude figure, Odysseus, facing right, wearing a hat, is running towards a tree for safety. Within this tree, two other nude men sit, both face left. A rock can be seen between the Ogress and Odysseus. Vines above. B. Parody version of the Judgment of Paris. Hera and Athena, opposed, standing to the left of the scene, it is not possible to identify the figures individually, one is robed, the other carries a mirror in one hand and is only partially robed. Aphrodite, facing right, is partly robed, and holds out a hand towards Paris. All three women have their hair either bound up in a headdress or in a hairstyle. At the far right, Paris, facing left, reclines, partly robed, with wreath on head. He holds out a second wreath toward Aphrodite. He is seated upon a decorated couch. Vines above. Black and reserved bands below figure scene. Rim is black.

According to a letter sent to D. van Bothmer in 1972 this vase is a modern copy. Accession details are available in Alexander (1937: 90-91). There is no reason to doubt that this is modern.

The human figures, boar and hare depicted on this vase do not reflect any known authentic Kabeiric vessel. In addition, the vines above the figure scenes are of a different stylistic basis.

Gorgon with robe and snakes in hair and at waist, facing left, holding arms out in supplication towards the two male figures. A second gorgon, Medusa, lies dying at the first's feet, robed and decapitated, blood emerging from the neck wound, in amongst the blood is the newborn Pegasus. Two nude male figures run away towards the right, looking back to the left, over their arms is a cauldron, presumably containing the head of Medusa. At the far right is Athena, holding her arms out in a similar manner to the first gorgon, wearing armour, long robe and helmet, her shield (inscribed 'Aeris') and spear sit by her side. Images seem to run as a story, telling the tale of the death of Medusa by Perseus.

Sacrificial debris layer

POTTERY DATE

Third-fourth quarter of 5th Century BC

DETAILED DESCRIPTIONS

Within heavy layer of ash with burnt bone and many fragments of badly broken pottery, mostly drinking shapes (skyphoi, kylikes), suggested that this is sacrificial debris. Two badly battered red figure fragments provide the approx. date. Miller (1979a) mentions black earth, some ash and burnt bone and large quantities of badly broken pottery of primarily drinking shapes. This debris did not extend over the whole area but gave way to contemporary layers.

Temple of Zeus

POTTERY DATE

DETAILED DESCRIPTIONS

Debris contained a few fragments of BF and RF. Dated layer contained pottery too early for the temple and included a votive krateriskos. Pottery from the 6th Century BC layers produced a Corinthian conical oinochoe and a fragment of an Argive krater. The lowest levels produced substantial amounts of 7th Century BC pottery. Cooking pots from the 5th Century BC are also noted. An increase in sanctuary activity in 8th-7th Century BC is evident from the pottery from this area.
